Union Accepts WLB Slash in 'Little Steel' Pay Increase Demand

Major Victory Seen

By Ben Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Yielding to presidential pressure, the C. I. O. United Steel Workers of America last night accepted the War Labor Board order which slashed to 44 cents an original union demand for a wage increase of $1 a day from the four "Little Steel" companies.

Acceptance came dramatically in Pittsburgh at a meeting of the steel union's policy-making committee after Philip Murray, who heads both the C. I. O. and the steel union, had asked the 125 delegates to abide by a presidential request to accept the distasteful WLB ruling. Murray was armed with a telegram from President Roosevelt which cited the "paramount domestic importance" of controlling the threatening rise in the cost of living. Murray's plea was indorsed by a unanimous vote of the delegates.

Viewed as Major Victory

The resolution accepting the WLB decision, which also orders the steel companies to install a maintenance of union membership plan, a union-dues checkoff and a daily minimum-wage guarantee, declared:

"We do not agree with the analysis of majority members of the War Labor Board that its wage award will meet the living-costs problem of the steel workers. We shall watch this phase of the program most carefully."

The steel workers' action was viewed as a major victory for the Administration's seven-point program to keep down the cost of living. In some quarters it was predicted that this marked a turning point in the fight against inflation, with organized labor throwing its weight behind a drive to make effective other aspects of the program, including price ceilings, excess-profits taxes, rationing, limitation of salaries to $25,000 a ear, farm-price controls and credit limi-

Woman, 60, Kills Mother in Hope She Will Hang

Haverford, Pa., July 17 (AP).—An 85-year-old woman was bludgeoned to death with a 10-pound furnace shaker today and Sergt. Neil McFadden said her daughter, 60, admitted the slaying.

District Attorney William B. McLenachan quoted the daughter, Anna Dietrich, as saying she was unable to "carry on" with the housework any longer and killed her mother, Mrs. Magdeleine Dietrich, in the hope that she would be hanged.

McLenachan said she recently received treatment for a mental ailment.

She told investigators she also had planned to kill her sister, Magdeleine, who shares the apartment in which the slaying occurred. The sister was at work when the mother was attacked.

What About The Closed Shop?

Leo Wolman's articles in The Sunday Post on labor problems have already attracted much attention; the third article in this series, to appear tomorrow, is sure to do so since it concerns one of the most difficult of all labor problems: The closed shop. Government officials, employers and employes both union and non-union will all find this Washington Post article of unusual interest.

Model Back for a WAAC

NO GIRDLE NEEDED—Issuing girdles to the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps would be like giving corsets to the Marines—that's what the California Models Guild thinks. The guild passed a resolution condemning the WAAC plan to issue two girdles each to its members and in doing so cited Screen Actress Leslie Brooks, former model, as Exhibit A. The guild's president suggested exercise and diet would give WAAC members hip lines like those of Miss Brooks, with a resultant saving on rubber

$120,000,000 Compromise On OPA Stalled

House and Senate conferees yesterday proposed a swift "compromise" of 120 million dollars for the Office of Price Administration, but action was held up when a majority of House conferees refused to sign.

Chairman Clarence Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee proposed the settlement, which was 45 million dollars higher than the House first voted, but said he needed the vote of one more conferee to report an agreement to the House.

Six Sign, Seventh Balks

Senate conferees quickly agreed to the amount, which was only five million dollars less than the Senate voted, but fell 20 million dollars short of the "minimum" amount Price Administrator Leon Henderson said was needed to administer controls effectively.

Six of the 12 House conferees are understood to have signed the report, but a seventh was required for the necessary majority. Most of the dissenters favored granting OPA 100 million dollars or less.

End Tax Bill 'Inequalities,' President Asks

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday called for expeditious Senate action on a tax bill based on principles of "equality" and eliminating special privileges for any group, as the House rounded two days of debate on its $8,144,000,000 bill.

President Roosevelt's appeal was delivered in person to Chairman Walter F. George of the Senate Finance Committee and implied renewal of the fight for more revenue in the Senate, involving such controversial issues as mandatory returns.

Morgenthau Present

Senator George assured the President the Senate can complete its tax action in six weeks, unless the Senate undertakes broad-scale revision of House provisions. In any case, he said the President should have the bill on his desk for signature by October 1.

At the White House, the President, Mr. George, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Randolph Paul, Treasury tax adviser, went

Glenn's License in Jeopardy

Higher Taxi Rates Ordered Into Effect at Sunday Midnight

A swift and unexpected climax of the turbulent District taxi issue came last night when the Public Utilities Commission issued simultaneous orders placing the new higher rates into effect Sunday at midnight, and recommending revocation of the hacker's license of Edwin A. Glenn, president of the cab drivers' union.

The new rates embody a 10-cent increase in all zones but the first, and provide a maximum $1.50 charge for many crosstown trips. A $2.50 hourly rate is specified as is a 10-cent charge for answering telephone calls.

A map recording the 21 subzones, beneath which is printed a key, consisting of 441 squares from which driver and passenger alike determine the cost of the trip, must be displayed in all cabs at 12:01 a. m., Monday.

According to PUC Chairman Gregory Hankin, the new zoning system is based on an "origin to destination" principle rather than on the number of divisional lines crossed, as is the present plan.

The action against Glenn, who for months has led the union's fight against the PUC, was taken after he denied having agreed to the PUC proposition that the taxi industry give the proposed PUC zone map a trial, in exchange for an immediate granting of the 30-50-70-90 rates.

According to Glenn, his only agreement to the PUC offer made at a conference with the commission on Tuesday was that he would recommend to the union that the offer

A 10-year-old boy was drowned, at least four persons suffered heat prostration and more than a score of Government workers were sent home as the city yesterday sweltered under high temperatures and humidity that hung like a thick, sticky haze.

Edward Johnson, 1619 Swann Street Northwest, drowned in the swimming pool on the Francis Junior High School playground, Twenty-fourth and N Streets Northwest. The body was found on the bottom of the pool in 11 feet of water by a life guard, Harry Tyler, who administered artificial respiration until the fire rescue squad and an Emergency Hospital ambulance arrived. He was pronounced dead at 2:10 p. m. Police were unable to locate any one who saw the boy drown. Tyler estimated that at least 1000 children were swimming in the pool at the time of the tragedy.

Glen Echo police late yesterday dragged the Potomac River near Sycamore Island for the body of a man believed to have drowned. Police found a pair of trousers and a shirt nearby. They will continue their search today.

Overcome by Heat

Lorraine Marshall, 19, of 17 Eighth Street Northeast, was overcome by heat at Fifteenth Street and New York Avenue Northwest and was treated at Casualty Hospital. Mary Powell, 25, of 819 Florida Avenue Northeast, was stricken at the Yale Laundry, 400 block New York Avenue Northwest. She was treated at Sibley Hospital.

Grover C. Kane, 57, of 101 B Street Southeast, was treated at Emergency Hospital after collapsing near his home, and Wilson Jones, 50, of 49 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest, was overcome in the 1500 block H Street Northwest and removed to Emergency, where he was admitted.

The temperature reached a high of 94 at 6 p. m., accompanied by a humidity that served to make matters worse as it ran as much as 20 per cent higher than for the past few days, the Weather Bureau said. Nazis Hurled Back Across Don At Voronezh, Push On in South; Rommel Loses 36-Hour Battle

U. S. Gen. Lee Tanks Lead Way in Stopping Attempts by Panzers To Take Vital Ridge

By George Lait

With the British Eighth Army Near El Alamein, Egypt, July 17.—With new American-made General Lee tanks leading the way, British Imperial forces have won the first phase of a monster tank battle on the central sector of the desert front, south of El Alamein.

After 36 hours of furious fighting without pause in the biggest tank engagement since the British withdrawal from Libya, Nazi General Field Marshal Erwin Rommel's Axis columns broke off the action and fled to the west.

Many German tanks were left wrecked and smoking on the battlefield.

The battle began on Thursday and was still raging at dawn on Friday through a blinding duststorm which made everything practically invisible.

The fighting centered about Ruweisat Ridge, which lies south of El Alamein and about 10 miles from the coast. The ridge itself is from 6 to 7 miles long, between 2 and 3 miles wide, is fairly high and gives command in every direction. It runs east and west.

Within the first few hours several German tanks were destroyed.

The entire German Fifteenth Armored Division and parts of the Twenty-first Division launched an attack against positions held by New Zealanders and Indians, who opened up a furious barrage with their anti-tank guns.

Axis infantry accompanying the tanks were met in fierce hand-to-hand fighting. Many were taken prisoner.

Break-Through Admitted By Rome, London Hears

London (Saturday), July 18 (INS).—Reuters News Agency today quoted a dispatch in Rome to the effect that British forces have scored a great break-through in the Egyptian desert.

In the central sector west of El Alamein British forces have penetrated "into a vast space separating our defenses, and have spread out in the rear of our defenses," the dispatch said.

'This Is It,' R.A.F. Ace Calls, Then Dies in Crippled Plane

By Ernest Agnew
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, July 17.—Bidding his comrades farewell with a calm "this is it, chaps," Irish Paddy Finucane, R. A. F. ace who had 33 German planes to his credit, plunged to his death in the English Channel last Tuesday in the wreckage of his crippled Spitfire, the air ministry announced tonight.

A veteran of more than 50 cross-Channel raids and the youngest wing commander in the R. A. F., Finucane, 21, was leading his squadron during the largest mass air assault yet upon Occupied France when a "million to one chance" shot from a German machine-gun post hit the radiator of his plane.

Unable to gain height, Finucane attempted to set his wounded Spitfire down in the sea but it sank immediately, dragging him down. Before the crash he called out his farewell message over his interplane radio.

Pilot Officer F. A. Aikman, 23-year-old No. 2 leader of the wing and a native of Toronto, went on and avenged the Irish ace by smashing the German machine-gun post.

Counterblow Cheers Moscow, Concerned About Million-Man Push for Stalingrad

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Saturday), July 18. Russian troops counterattacking south of Voronezh were reported today to have hurled the Germans back across the Don River, but the Nazis still were making progress toward Stalingrad at the southern end of the long Don front where the invaders are using a million men.

A savage stab into the German salient which had crossed to the east bank of the Don to menace Voronezh, several miles beyond the river, "annihilated the 222d Nazi regiment," an announcement said.

Fierce Action West of Don

The Russians then crossed the river and fierce fighting now is taking place on the western bank, front line dispatches reported in the most heartening news heard here in weeks.

Two populated places were seized in the area as the Germans retreated "in disorder," and the Russians seized the initiative at the river which is several miles west of Voronezh City.

(A Berlin radio summary of the fighting acknowledged severe Russian counterattacks on "German oridgeheads on the Don," but asserted the Reds were repulsed.)

Picture Different in South

This encouraging news came after the regular midnight communique had told merely of continuing fierce battles in the Voronezh sector at the upper end of the imperiled Don River front.

South of Millerovo at the other end of the front the Russians admittedly were not doing so well. Their armies still were withdrawing slowly while rear guards fought desperately to check a steady German advance toward railway points leading east to the rich Volga port of Stalingrad.

Soviet tanks covering the Red army's withdrawal in the Millerovo area were said to have killed 1200 Germans in one sector of the wheatland approaches of the Caucasus.

Millerovo is about 125 air line miles north of Rostov, the southern anchor of the Red Army based on the Sea of Azov, and Likhaya, an intermediate point between the two cities, is a junction on the railway which branches east to Stalingrad. It is that junction toward which the Nazis are slowly progressing.

Headed Toward Rail Junction

Stalingrad, within 175 miles of the fighting, was in greater danger with each hour; Rostov and the armies based on the west Caucasus corner were in grave peril of envelopment by the German forces southeast of Millerovo.

Only at the Russians' northern anchor, Voronezh, at least 175 miles

U. S. Rests Its Case Against 4 at Spy Trial

Dynamite, Firebombs And Secret Orders Offered in Evidence

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

The Government yesterday rested its case against half the eight German spies on trial here.

Attorney General Biddle and Maj. Gen. Myron Cramer, the prosecutors, announced just before the noon recess yesterday that the Military Commission had heard all the evidence against the four Germans who slipped off a submarine to a Long Island beach the night of June 13.

Placed in evidence were dynamite and firebombs, German clothes, the secret orders the spies had received from the Nazi high command and the confessions of the four spies. One of these was so long in its fantastic detail that it took almost two days to read. Upon it rests the hope of one spy that he will be safe in a prison cell when his colleagues are sent to the scaffold or to the firing squad.

Next Case Begun

The prosecutors immediately began their case against the other four spies, who came off another submarine on the Florida coast the night of June 17. Seven counter-espionage agents, FBI men, took the witness stand to testify about the arrests of the four Germans, identified the statements they made and presented the photographs of the invasion trail found on the Florida beach.

The commissioners examined pictures of explosives and clothes which investigators found hidden in the sand. There was a supply

Japs Cling To Aleutians Under Fire

Raids Keep Foe From Capitalizing On Island Gains

Small Japanese forces have been clinging for six weeks to three barren rockpiles off the west coast of Alaska, battered intermittently by American bombers and unable to make capital of their "conquest," the Navy Department revealed yesterday.

In its first detailed account of the fighting in the Aleutians, the Navy said the island of Agattu, 750 miles west of Dutch Harbor, was occupied by the Japs as well as Kiska and Attu. None of the three was defended or contained military or naval installations.

The Navy also revealed that 94 casualties were suffered in two Japanese air raids on Dutch Harbor July 3 and 4. These included 44 military personnel and 1 civilian killed and 49 persons wounded.

Old U. S. Ship Destroyed

One American vessel, the old Northwestern, beached and used to house civilian workmen, was destroyed.

Destruction of or damage to at least 13 Japanese war vessels and transports in the Aleutian raid, which coincided with the abortive attack on Midway Island, was confirmed.

Since July 11, the Navy reported, no attacks have been launched against the forlorn collections of tents and huts sheltering the invaders on Kiska, Agattu and Attu, though "operations are continuing."

Losses at Dutch Harbor, besides the Northwestern, were limited to an undisclosed number of airplanes

Yanks in Ireland

Following his trip to training camps in this country, Marshall Andrews was sent by The Post to Ireland to see our troops in the final phase of preparation. The next step will be facing the enemy. They will be as well trained as soldiers can be.

By Marshall Andrews

Northern Ireland, July 17.—One idea new in this war has taken root in Ireland and is bearing strange fruit, indeed.

Since the growth of the United States Army to wartime size, America has burgeoned with reception centers and replacement centers designed to convert civilians into soldiers before they are turned over to tactical units. There is one of these in Northern Ireland, a reception center and replacement center combined.

ANDREWS

In many respects it is very like those you have seen in operation back home. It takes civilians, examines them physically, inoculates them against a galaxy of infections, uniforms them, classifies them, dips them in military lore and passes them on. But you should see its recruits.

Among them are American citizens who never have seen America.

There are Americans with the true cockney speech from the shadow of St. Mary le Bow or with an Irish brogue thick as the upland peat bogs.

There are Americans who have fought in a dozen scattered wars under the flags of half the world and who now have found love of fighting and love of country together under one flag.

Veterans and Untried Youths

There are downy-cheeked lads and grizzled veterans, boys not out of school and graduates of the toughest school of them all back for their doctorate in battle.

Wherever they were born, whatever has been their allegiance, they are home again now, in the army of their own country.

Established to enlist and process American citizens who wished to join the United States Army over here, the replacement center of the 1942 A. E. F. is prepared to expand, in instant response to demand, from its modest limits into a great base with a manifold purpose. In time it will receive and distribute

Dealers Ask Minimum Price Ruling to Avoid Gas War

Representatives of gasoline dealers in the rationed East yesterday asked the Office of Price Administration to bar a possible price war under the coupon rationing system by ordering a "cellar" for gas prices.

The request was one phase of a program drafted by independent dealers who seek Government help to rescue them from the economic extinction they fear will result from operation of the permanent rationing plan which goes into effect Wednesday.

The dealers met with Joel Dean, chief of OPA's gasoline rationing section, shortly after the War Production Board announced that the present 50 per cent cut in deliveries to dealers will be rescinded as soon as the coupon system becomes operative.

The small independent dealer, lacking the financial backing of the major oil retailers, fears that unless supplies to filling stations continue to be restricted, the bigger concerns will launch a price war for the purpose of obtaining the largest possible share of rationed business, it was explained.

The dealers also asked the Government to make loans available to independents to enable them to stay in business and to arrange debt moratoriums to aid them in their struggle with better financed stations.

It was understood that the dealers' representatives were told that OPA's job was to ration and to keep prices from advancing rather than to establish price minimums.

Little hope also was held out for

'Sit Down!' Sailor Yells at Nimitz; He Does and Likes It

Oklahoma City, July 17 (AP).—In the confusion attending a West Coast plane crash in which Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, escaped injury, Frank Hall, pharmacist's mate and member of the rescue crew, did not notice the officer's rank as occupants were being moved to a field hospital.

The admiral stood up.

Hey, you, sit down and be quiet," Hall shouted.

Then he became aware of the admiral's rank and apologized.

"Stick by your guns, sailor," replied Nimitz. "I shouldn't have stood up."

Hall, who has been recommended for a medal for his part in the rescue, described the incident in a letter to his mother, Mrs. M. J. Matthews.

Japs' Hankow Base Raided Fourth Time

Daylight Sortie

R.A.F. Raids On Sub Bases Continue

By Drew Middleton
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, July 17.—Pouncing upon Hitler's sources of submarine power and the factories of the Ruhr in sharp, short day and dusk assaults, the R. A. F. added a new phase to its offensive against Germany proper which in the past felt the weight of British bombs mostly in mass night assaults.

In the latest of these bold sorties by small forces, black, four motored Stirling bombers swept down to 500 feet over the Flender works plant near Luebeck late yesterday and blasted slipways where submarines are turned out for attacks on shipping in the Atlantic and along the Russian convoy route.

Single British bombers again attacked objectives in the Ruhr arsenal and northwest Germany in daylight today, their second such venture in as many days. The air ministry said they sustained no losses.

In yesterday's raids the submarine yards at Flensburg, Baltic port on the German-Danzig border, also were blasted again and British air sources said considerable damage was inflicted at both places.

Lone Bomber Retaliates

In retaliation, the Germans sent a lone bomber which dropped explosives in one place in the greater London area, causing some damage but no casualties. It was London's first alert since March 16. Other German raiders bombed a southwest coast town. One bomber was intercepted by the R. A. F. and shot down off the south coast.

The effects of the British bomber command to give immediate aid to Russia indicates that long-range daylight raids may be attempted to smash communications and depots in eastern Germany.

The cloud cover through which the Stirlings flew to Luebeck offers protection similar to darkness and the attack was made so swiftly that the raiders were back in the clouds before German fighters could rise to the challenge, informed air sources said.

The said there and upon Flensburg followed daylight attacks by British bombers which also took advantage of clouds to penetrate to the Ruhr. The British informants said these bold sorties were valuable as much for their damage to German morale as for destruction of Hitler's war industries.

Daylight Raiding Advocated

Daylight raiding long has been advocated by some American air experts as the best way to eliminate key factories in Germany. But when such attacks have been made heretofore under good weather conditions losses have been heavy.

Air experts who could not be quoted by name said bad weather, the drain of the R. A. F. for campaigns in Egypt and elsewhere and the failure to develop a long-range fighter has curtailed the British bombing campaign aimed at pulverizing Germany's war potential. The raids were declared still below the peak of striking power necessary to become decisive.

Only three widely heralded 1000-bomber raids have been made against Cologne, Emden and Bremen. But these experts declared the damage was so great in those important war cities that they could make little, if any, further contribution to the German armies.

The R. A. F.'s prime aim, a commentator said, was to destroy all industries supplying the German armies and to curtail the submarine menace by devastating their construction yards and bases.

War Supplies Now Reach China Over New 'Burma Road'

By Spencer Moosa,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Chungking, July 17.—A fourth and "very satisfactory" air raid on Hankow, big Japanese base on the Yangtze, was announced today by General Stillwell's headquarters, while aground the Chinese reported they were inflicting casualties on the Japanese in fighting in four provinces.

At the same time the Chinese disclosed officially that war supplies now were arriving over a newly opened 2800-mile road from Russia.

A communique said the waterfront at Hankow, midway between Shanghai and Chungking, was attacked yesterday by "Allied bombers" escorted by fighter planes. Previous raids were made July 1, 2 and 6.

It was announced today that in the July 2 raid a dozen 220-pound bombs struck the Hankow docks and warehouses and there were several near misses on ships.

Americans Raid Airdromes

Further details also were supplied concerning a raid on the Japanese airdrome at Nanchang July 3. Bombers led by Maj. William E. Basye and escorted by fighters led by Squadron Leader John R. Howard, damaged runways and two hangars, destroyed three Japanese planes which were trying to take off, several others that were parked and shot one out of the air.

The Americans lost one fighter plane, but the pilot was saved.

Howard is from St. Louis, Mo., and is a former member of the American Volunteer Group.

The Chinese Central News Agency said an American air attack on Whitecloud airdrome, on the outskirts of Canton on July 4, "achieved a demoralizing effect on the enemy," one immediate result being a 50 per cent drop in the value of the Japanese military yen.

There was a food shortage because Chinese farmers were reluctant to come to the markets, thousands of inhabitants left the city, and those who remained were compelled by the Japanese to leave every morning and return at nightfall, the agency said.

Sankiangkow Recaptured

Ankeid, Chinese dispatches said Chinese forces striking eastward in Kiangsi Province had recaptured Sankiangkow, 35 miles south of Nanchang, and laid siege to the walled city of Linchwan, 55 miles southeast of Nanchang.

The Chinese army reported it inflicted "considerable casualties" on the Japanese in fighting near Wenchow, Japanese-occupied port in Chekiang Province; repelled a Japanese sortie southwest of Kwangfeng, in Kiangsi Province; beat back with heavy losses a Japanese push south of Paotow, in Suiyuan Province, and made a successful surprise raid on the Japanese at Pukungao, in Kwangtung Province.

The Japanese, after suffering many casualties, called up reinforcements in Kwangtung and the battle is continuing, the Chinese communique said.

Supplies Continue to Arrive

Operations over the road from Russia to help replace the closed Burma road were disclosed in an announcement that Wong Wen-hao, Chinese economic minister, had just completed an inspection tour of the route, during which he saw vital supplies moving toward Chungking by truck, by cart and on the backs of thousands of camels.

The road runs up through the precipitous mountains of northern Szechwan and Shensi provinces, then follows the old willow-lined Imperial Highway to Kansu, skirts the Great Wall, and retraces Marco Polo's silk trail across the black Gobi Desert to Baboon Pass on the Kansu-Sinkiang border. There it joins the Sinkiang provincial road system to reach Tacheng, on the border of Russian Turkistan, whence a Soviet road leads to the railhead at Alma Ata.

Most of the route has been constructed since the Chinese-Japanese war began.

first birthday in the hospital—but the Nazis didn't send him there. Paddy broke a bone in his foot one night while celebrating destruction of two German fighters the day before.

It was four months later that he was wounded in a fight over the Channel, but he managed to come home to a perfect landing under the shepherding of a fellow pilot.

A native of neutral Eire, Finucane came of a family wrapped up in the British war effort. His father, Thomas, helps build the Spitfires his son flew. One brother, Raymond, is a sergeant in the bomber command, and another brother, Kelvin, who has just turned 13, already is planning to join the R. A. F. when he is old enough.

Finucane wore the Distinguished Service Order and had thrice received the Distinguished Flying Cross—DFC with double bar. He was promoted to wing commander—comparable to a lieutenant colonelcy in the United States Army—last June 30.

He achieved fame first as a section leader in R. A. F. Squadron No. 452—largely Australian-manned. When legless Douglas Bader bailed out of a wrecked plane and became a prisoner of the Germans, Finucane became Britain's most noted ace. Bader's score was at least 15 Nazi planes.

Finucane possessed many of Bader's qualities—the same gift of leadership, the same mastery of tactics, the same trick of maneuvering to offer other members of his flight a better chance to shoot down the enemy.

Finucane confessed that he had "a funny feeling in my tummy" when he started each flight over Nazi-held territory. "But that goes soon enough. Once you're in the air, everything's fine. Your brain works fast, and if the enemy's met, it seems to operate like a clockwork motor—accepting this, rejecting that; sizing up this, remembering that. You haven't time to feel anything really, but your nerves may be a bit on edge, not from fear but from excitement, from the intensity of mental effort."

atop the escarpment, I couldn't see much through the swirling dust. But I heard the clanking of tanks and the banging of guns of all calibers.

I learned during the fight, however, that the Germans were using at least three captured American-made Gen. Grant tanks, as well as their own heaviest Mark VI's.

Throughout the thick of the fighting and the duststorm R. A. F. bombers blasted enemy bases immediately behind the battle line. The crash of our heavy bombs formed a booming background for the noisy concert close at hand.

When a tank came in to refuel I asked the begrimed gunner, "How are things out there?"

He looked me over and then laconically replied:

"Dusty."

Possession of Ruweisat Ridge and the arrival of the new Gen. Lees were the factors which swung the important battle to the imperial forces.

The British Eighth Army held part of the ridge and in a sudden attack on Tuesday night gained complete control. On Wednesday afternoon the Axis forces launched a small counterattack, which failed, and that evening they staged a heavy attack which developed into the present battle.

Rommel threw the bulk of his armored forces into the conflict at dawn Thursday but was able to make no progress against the British positions atop the ridge.

The defeat of the enemy forces was regarded as making safe for the immediate present both Alexandria and the rich Nile Delta.

The new General Lee tank is an improved version of the General Grant, which served as the British mainstay during the early phases of the desert campaign. The General Lee mounts 75 millimeter cannon and has a much wider range of fire than the General Grant.

In addition, the General Lee has streamlined armor, instead of riveted armor, and a somewhat lower silhouette.

In the initial phase of the battle Rommel sent tanks lumbering up Ruweisat Ridge in an effort to dislodge imperial forces there. Gen. Sir Claude Auchinleck immediately sent tanks forward to help out the infantry, whereupon Rommel flung more armor into the conflict. So what started as a local tank engagement became a great battle.

Fierce fighting also was reported to be continuing around Tel El Eisa (the Hill of Jesus) to the North on the coastal railway, British Imperial the Axis better than they received.

Royal Air Force planes took to the skies in ever-increasing numbers forces in that area continued to give during the crucial stages of the battle to blast Axis tanks and troop concentrations. Heavy bombers roared westward to attack Axis supply lines, ports of entry and ammunition dumps.

Friday's Middle East Command communique said:

"There was heavy fighting yesterday in the central sector with the enemy continuing his effort to dislodge British forces from Ruweisat Ridge.

"Armored forces on both sides were engaged in the morning. A number of the enemy units were knocked out.

"Fighting was resumed in the evening and continued during the night.

"Fighting also continued throughout the day in the northern sector.

"In the south the enemy withdrew slightly. The Royal Air Force continued extensive operations."

(An Exchange (British) Telegraph Co. dispatch emanating from Zurich declared that neutral correspondents in Rome had been informed that Axis troops penetrated British lines at El Alamein and "were continuing the offensive against Alexandria.")

Rommel appeared to have staked everything in his all-out drive to break the British lines at Ruweisat Ridge and push on to Alexandria, some 80 miles to the east.

Second Front Is Reported Being Studied

By the United Press

London, July 17.—American and British officials are about to re-examine the prospects for launching a gigantic land, air and sea assault on Europe at the earliest possible moment, highly reliable sources said tonight.

The second front conferences will cover military, naval and production matters and will seek some way to force Hitler to withdraw some divisions from South Russia. This, it was said, might enable Marshal Semyon Timoshenko to hurl a counter-offensive at the Germans from the East while the Allies strike in the West.

The peril to the Volga River and the Caucasus was believed compelling Anglo-American officials to take stock of their invasion resources.

The arrival in London this week of Edward R. Stettinius, U. S. land-lease administrator, and William C. Bullitt, special assistant to Navy Secretary Knox, substantiated this view. Stettinius conferred with Prime Minister Churchill tonight and meets Air Chief Marshal Sir Charles F. A. Portal tomorrow. Then he will confer with heads of various war departments.

Semiofficial reports and rumors the last few weeks have seemed to discourage the idea of an invasion of the Continent this year but some observers now wondered whether these might not be a smoke screen covering actual invasion preparations.

Agitation for a second front is strong, particularly among left wing groups. The central committee of Britain's Communist Party held a special session today and issued a statement urging "all labor and democratic organizations and all individual citizens to lose no time pressing upon the Prime Minister, government and members of Parliament . . . the imperative urgency of the immediate establishment of a second front."

Three Brazilian Cabinet Members, Police Chief Quit

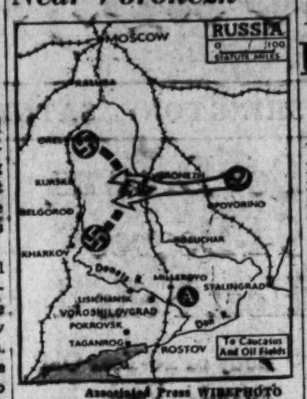
By the Associated Press

Rio de Janeiro, July 17 (U.P.).—President Getulio Vargas today accepted the resignations of three cabinet members and the chief of police of the Federal District.

The officials, whose resignations were accepted by official decree, were Minister of Justice Francisco da Silva Campos, Undersecretary to the Minister of Justice Vasco Leitao de Cunha, Director General of the Press and Propaganda Lourival Fontes and Chief of the Federal District Police Felinto Muller. They were reported to have been removed at their own request.

Muller actually was removed from office earlier this month, reportedly because of his attempts to create a "super-police" organization often referred to as the Brazilian Gestapo.

Nazi Lines Broken Near Voronezh



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

REDS FORCE BREAKS—German invasion formations (broken line) west of Voronezh were declared broken at two points by Red Army thrusts (arrow). Southeast of Millerovo (A) the Soviets waged strength-sapping rear guard actions against the Hitler spearhead aimed at Stalingrad. A special German communiqué claimed Nazi infantrymen captured Voroshilovgrad, capital of the Donets coal country north of the farthermost point of Nazi penetration, were the Germans mired. There the Russian chances grew brighter with every Red Army counterattack.

(A special German communique said German infantrymen had stormed and captured Voroshilovgrad, capital of the Donets coal country, which the German tank formations had bypassed in their plunge to Millerovo and beyond.

(German-controlled reports via Ankara and Stockholm said Josef Stalin had gone from Moscow to Stalingrad to direct personally the defense of this Volga gateway to the east Caucasus.)

The steppes southeast of Millerovo, cloaked in a sea of waving wheat and cut by shallow rivers, presented the scene of the greatest danger.

Fields Choked With Bodies

The Russians, even in general retreat, were lashing back repeatedly at the huge tanks and infantry masses which are pushing them southeastward.

Dispatches told how they left the wheatfields choked with German bodies and the wreckage of tanks, guns and planes.

But these wheatlands were to have played a large part in feeding the nation in the coming winter.

At one river crossing below Millerovo, the Russians turned on their attackers and dealt them a savage blow, destroying 34 tanks and killing 600 men. In this same sector a German flanking operation was defeated, the attackers losing 1800 dead and 14 tanks, dispatches said.

The Germans were heedless of the losses. They constantly threw in more men and machines and they still were strongly supported from the air, with dive-bombers slashing at the Red Army lines before tanks and infantrymen rushed them.

On the upper Don, north and northwest of Voronezh, limits the Russians were reported breaking into the Nazis' hastily fortified positions, leaving many ravines and hills cluttered with broken machines and bodies.

South of the city in the "V" caused by junction of the Don and Voronezh Rivers, the Russian position was more acute. Here Hungarian cavalry was attacking behind tanks.

The government newspaper Izvestia said the Germans were dying before Voronezh as they did at Sevastopol. The Russians estimate that 60,000 Germans lost their lives in taking the Crimean stronghold.

Goguchar Fighting Obscure

There was no news of the fighting southeast of Boguchar, 70 miles north of Millerovo, where the Russians reported a withdrawal several days ago. This German push from Boguchar down the upper curve of the Don is another threat to Stalingrad.

Dispatches from fronts considerably removed from the southern battlefields suggested, meanwhile, that fresh German activity could be expected momentarily in two sectors.

In the Bryansk area, 200 miles southwest of Moscow, the Germans were massing reserves of infantry and tanks.

Southwest of Rzhev, 130 miles northwest of the capital, the Germans were reported determined to take an important junction to link two big Nazi formations for offensive purposes.

Col. Clement Decorated for BataanHeroism

By the Associated Press

Col. William T. Clement, Marine veteran of the fighting in the Philippines, was awarded a Navy Cross for distinguished service yesterday in a colorful, full-dress ceremony at the Washington Marine Barracks.

Presentation of the medal was made by Secretary Knox in the presence of Lieut. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, Marine commandant, after reading of a citation praising the 57-year-old colonel for contributing "very materially" to the Philippines campaign.

Meeting with reporters after the parade and review held by the Washington Marine Detachment, Colonel Clement declared that the Japanese "who have made some bad blunders" probably could have taken the Philippines earlier than they did had they pursued a different strategy at the outset.

"It would have been a different story," he said, "if they had landed even some small parties directly on Bataan the first day of the war, instead of going all around the coast. We were very lightly defended there at that time."

Such a prompt invasion of Bataan would have closed to the American forces the rugged mountain wilderness into which they later withdrew and to prolong their resistance to the enemy hordes for many weeks.

The colonel only recently came to Washington after a visit with his three children who live with his sister-in-law at New Haven, Conn. His wife died in March, 1941.

Colonel Clement left Corregidor on April 9 by submarine and came to the United States by way of Australia.

Marshall Cites Wellington on 'Quill Driving'

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, yesterday gave his desk officers a pointed reminder that troop commanders in the field should not be bothered with too much mail and too many instructions from Washington.

The memorandum was sent to the commanding generals of the Army air forces, ground forces, services of supply, Quartermaster General, Adjutant General, the Deputy Chief of Staff and assistant chiefs of staff.

General Marshall enclosed a copy of a letter sent in 1810 from General Wellington, the British troop commander in the Napoleonic Wars, to the then Secretary of State for War in London, Lord Bradford.

This letter read:

"If I attempted to answer the mass of futile correspondence which surrounds me, I should be debarred from all serious business of campaigning.

"I must remind your lordship—for the last time—that so long as I retain an independent position, I shall see that no officer under my command is debarred by attending to the futile driveling of mere quill driving in your lordship's office—from attending to his first duty—which is, and always has been, so to train the private men under his command that they may, without question, beat any force opposed to them in the field."

Commenting on this letter, General Marshall told his subordinates:

"The reaction to instructions from Washington of a troop commander far from home, in surroundings with which we are utterly unfamiliar, may be akin to those of the great duke, and we could well govern ourselves accordingly."

War Sidelights

Nazis Seize Hostages in Belgium

Vichy, July 17 (AP).—Gen. Baron Alexander von Falkenhausen, German military commander for Belgium and northern France, has announced the seizure of a large number of Belgian hostages who will be executed should sabotage continue in Belgium, a Brussels dispatch said today.

The Nazi occupation authorities recently seized a large group in the Netherlands for the same reason.

French Spirit Lives

Vichy, July 17 (AP).—The trial of 33 persons, including eight women, charged with Communist attacks opened today before a German military court at Nancy.

They are accused of having committed a series of attacks throughout the Muerthe Et Moselle department since the band was organized last February by a worker at Auboue under the title "chief of the popular army."

Nazi Blood Bath

London, July 17 (AP).—The execution of 17 Poles convicted of sabotaging German transport trains bound for the Russian front was announced in the Krakauer Zeitung, a German newspaper in Poland, the Polish telegraph agency said today.

A Czech government spokesman said today 11 patriots were executed in Nazi-ruled Bohemia and Moravia last week on charges ranging from possession of firearms to illegal slaughter of cattle and concealment of crops.

Captives Foiled

Melbourne, Australia, July 17 (AP).—German and Italian prisoners of war dug 400 feet of tunnel in vain efforts to escape an internment camp in the Melbourne area, Australian army authorities disclosed tonight.

All the tunnel diggers were caught before they reached the outer perimeter. A few others, however, have escaped by slipping away from outdoor labor gangs.

4 Downed at Malta

Valletta, Malta, July 17 (AP).—British fighters shot down four Messerschmitt fighters and damaged others in a brief enemy attack today.

The R. A. F. reported that during a recent sweep, a British pilot threw away his own chance of survival by tossing a rubber boat to a wounded German he had shot into the sea. The Briton reached port safely, however, and the enemy pilot was picked up by a launch.

Alarm in Africa

Durban, Union of South Africa, July 17 (AP).—This city on Africa's southeast coast was under a 90-minute alarm tonight but there was no immediate indication of the reason. Officials said there would be a statement Monday.

(Axis submarines have been operating off the southeast coast of Africa and there have been previous alarms in Durban.)

Cuban Rubber for U. S.

Havana, Cuba, July 17 (AP).—Announcing it would gather rubber and give it to the United States, the Cuban army today called on Cubans to donate scrap rubber "as a contribution to the democratic cause."

Nazi Bomber Attacks Trawler Off Iceland

Reykjavik, Iceland, July 17 (U.P.).—U. S. Army headquarters tonight announced that a German bomber unsuccessfully attacked a trawler in the waters off the northern coast of Iceland yesterday.

The raider dropped three bombs, but only one exploded. The enemy plane then swooped down to machine gun the ship. There were no casualties.

A half dozen German raiding planes have been reported in the vicinity of Iceland this summer, but the island has not yet been bombed.

U. S. Sub Sinks 5 Axis Ships In Pacific

By the Associated Press

The destruction of five enemy ships in the Pacific by a United States submarine on its first war patrol was disclosed yesterday in a letter of commendation sent to a member of the crew by the commanding admiral of the submarine fleet.

Arthur W. Clark, jr., 23, electrician's mate, first class, forwarded the letter to his mother, Mrs. Nell Kuehnle of Ramona, Calif., although the commendatory letter gave few details it said five ships totaling 25,627 tons, including a submarine, were sunk and a 10,100-ton ship was damaged.

Meanwhile, the Navy announced the loss of a small Dutch merchantman, a medium-sized British cargo rarrier and a large United States merchantman in the Caribbean and sinking of a medium-sized United States merchant ship attacked in the Indian Ocean Jan. April.

The announcements, revealing that 17 seamen were killed and more than 100 others rescued, boosted to 380 the unofficial Associated Press tabulation of United and neutral Nations merchant ship sinkings in the Atlantic area since December 7.

5 of Crew, Captain Lost

The large American merchantman was sunk in the Caribbean, June 14. Five of the crew, including the skipper, Capt. Gustav Olafson, were lost.

While the 46 survivors drifted in a lifeboat they heard the explosion of another ship and later were joined by a lifeboat of about 15 survivors from that submarine victim. Survivors of both ships were picked up by a merchantman which was torpedoed that night. Seven other crewmen of the large vessel died then. Sinking of the rescue ship was announced July 5.

Forty survivors from the American ship torpedoed in the Indian Ocean expressed belief that the attack was made by a Japanese submarine.

After the ship burst into flames, the 38-man crew and two passengers stayed near the ship in two lifeboats until the next morning, when the survivors finally abandoned her. All were returned from the Far East and landed safely at an East coast port.

The Dutch ship's 39 surviving crewmen said their vessel went down so quickly following the submarine attack in the Caribbean May 24 that two seamen lost their lives.

Adrift For Nine Days

Survivors related that the U-boat commander, after asking for their ship's name and cargo, pointed out two crew members floating on the sea before he cruised away.

The British merchantman, which was armed, was torpedoed and shelled in the Caribbean June 23, sinking with the loss of two members of the 40-man crew. A third died later in a lifeboat, but 37 others were picked up by a rescue ship after drifting nine days in two lifeboats and three rafts.

Survivors said the gun crew was unable to fire at the raider because the torpedo had caused the ship to list so severely. Following the sinking, the submarine came alongside their boat, the seamen said, and for some minutes the two crews conversed in English. Many of the Germans appeared to be about 22 or 23, two of them saying that they had attended schools in England.

Invasion Near, Reds Warn Reich

London (Saturday), July 18 (U.P.).—A warning to the German public that American and British troops soon will carry the war to Germany itself was broadcast by the Moscow radio, the Daily Express reported today.

"You can be certain that British and American soldiers are about to land in western Europe," the Soviet radio was quoted as saying in a broadcast beamed to the Reich. "While German armies are being decimated on the Eastern Front, the war will move toward Germany."

and a few barracks, warehouses and fuel oil tanks at Fort Mears set afire, an empty warehouse hit at Mears and a Navy mail plane machine gunned as it was taking off.

The attack on Dutch Harbor, the Navy communique said, was "not unexpected" and fire was opened on the attacking planes 5 minutes before the first bomb fell. In the harbor at the time were three destroyers, an Army transport, a mine sweeper and a Coast Guard cutter.

The text of the communique, No. 98 from the Navy, follows:

Aleutians

"1. In early June, Japanese naval forces made a two-pronged thrust at our westernmost possessions, Midway and the Aleutian chain. The presence in each attacking force of troop transports indicated that these attacks were aimed at capture and occupation. The thrust at Midway was made by approximately 80 ships, including four carriers, at least three battleships, and a large number of cruisers, destroyers and transports.

"A simultaneous thrust was made on the Aleutians employing a far smaller force of approximately two small carriers, two seaplane tenders, several cruisers and destroyers and from four to six transports. The size of the forces involved shows the attack on Midway to have been the primary objective.

"2. The attack on Midway was repelled as described in Navy Department Communique No. 97. A resume of operations in the Aleutian Islands to date is given in the following paragraphs.

"3. The first attack on Dutch Harbor and Fort Mears was made at about 9 a. m. on June 3, concurrently with the early stages of the Japanese attack on Midway. Five waves of three planes each, launched from carriers to the southward of Dutch Harbor, participated in the 20-minute attack, which was concentrated on Dutch Harbor and the nearby Army station at Fort Mears.

"4. Three United States destroyers, an Army transport, a minesweeper and a Coast Guard cutter were in the harbor, as well as an old station ship, the Northwestern, which had been beached and was used as barracks for contractors' personnel. The attack was not unexpected, and antiaircraft crews, who were at their battle stations, both aboard the ships and at the shore batteries, opened fire five minutes before the first bomb was dropped. To obtain maneuverability the ships present got under way, continuing their antiaircraft fire. No ship was hit during the raid. Two of the attacking aircraft were shot down.

"5. A few barracks and warehouses at Fort Mears and Dutch Harbor were bombed and set afire and a Navy patrol plane which was about to take off with official mail was strafed.

"6. On June 4, Army bombers and Navy patrol planes located and attacked the enemy carriers which had launched the attacking planes. Several bomb and torpedo attacks were made but results could not be observed.

"7. One enemy plane was shot down during the several reconnoissance flights which the Japanese made over the Dutch Harbor area following the initial raid.

"8. About 5 p. m. on June 4, 18 carrier-based bombers and 16 fighters attacked the installations at Dutch Harbor and Fort Mears. This attack was made simultaneously with an attack on the Army post at Fort Glenn, about 70 miles west of Dutch Harbor on the island of Umnak, where nine enemy fighters strafed shore installations. Two of the attacking planes were shot down by Army pursuit planes and the remaining seven withdrew without inflicting damage.

"9. The alarm at Dutch Harbor and Fort Mears was sounded well in advance of the attack and the enemy was met with heavy antiaircraft fire from ship and shore batteries. The station ship Northwestern was bombed and destroyed by fire. A warehouse and a few fuel oil tanks were hit and set afire, and one empty aircraft hangar was hit.

"10. Casualties amounted to approximately 44 military and Navy personnel killed and 49 wounded, and one civilian employe killed.

"11. Since June 4, there have been no further attacks on Dutch Harbor, Fort Mears, Fort Glenn or any other U. S. military installations in Alaska or the Aleutian Islands.

"12. Our Naval patrol planes, Army bombers and submarines, under the unified command of the Navy, have conducted the following attacks on the enemy forces which have made landings in the westernmost island groups which include Attu and Kiska.

"(a) On June 5, Army aircraft attacked an enemy cruiser with undetermined results.

"(b) On June 11, a Naval patrol plane reported enemy forces in Kiska Harbor. During the night this force was attacked by patrol planes and Army bombers. Results were not observed.

"(c) On June 12, enemy ships were observed at both Attu and Kiska, and about 20 tents and temporary structures were observed on the shore at Kiska. The enemy ships at Kiska were attacked by long range Army aircraft and hits were made on the ships in the harbor but the exact extent of the damage could not be determined.

"(d) Various bombing and reconnaissance missions against Kiska were conducted in the week from 12 to 18 June with no important results or major changes in the situation. Weather prevented observation of Attu.

"(e) On June 18, the ships in Kiska were bombed by Army aircraft, resulting in the sinking of one transport near the center of the harbor.

"(f) All operations from June 21 to July 3, have been covered by Navy Department Communique No. 99.

"(g) On July 4, United States submarines torpedoed three destroyers on Kiska, sinking two and leaving the third badly damaged. A third destroyer was sunk by a United States submarine on Agattu.

"(h) On July 5, a United States submarine torpedoed and is believed to have sunk a fourth Japanese destroyer off Kiska.

"(i) On July 6, Army aircraft dropped 56 bombs on the enemy shore installations at Kiska.

"(j) On July 11, Army aircraft bombed an enemy cuiser in Kiska with undetermined results.

"(k) Since July 11, there has been no material change in the general situation.

"13. The military results of the Aleutian campaign to date are as follows:

"(1) The enemy inflicted minor damage to the Naval Station at Dutch Harbor and the Army post at Fort Mears but did not seriously impair their military effectiveness.

"(b) The enemy has occupied the undefended islands of Attu, Kiska and Agattu in the westernmost tip of the Aleutian chain and has constructed temporary living facilities ashore.

"(c) At least seven enemy aircraft have been destroyed and our pilots' reports indicate damage and possible destruction of several others. A number of our aircraft have been lost.

"(d) As previously reported, the following damage has been inflicted on the enemy naval forces since June 3:

SUNK	DAMAGED
3 destroyers	4 cruisers
1 transport	3 destroyers
	1 gunboat
	1 transport

"13. Operations against the enemy in this area continue."

THE IMPORTANT MEN'S CORNER

Alien Waiters Hope To Find New Jobs

Those Facing Release Say They'll Be Hard to Replace

The alien waiters who will lose their jobs because the public has talked too loosely around them aren't worrying about themselves because a first-class waiter is a roaming man by nature, generally speaking, and always can get a job, hotel men said yesterday.

One hotel official said that on the contrary some of the alien waiters, who will be discharged Wednesday under Justice Department orders, have considerately wondered how the hotel would find men of comparable merit. The good waiter was said to be a prize, one not too easy to find.

When, several weeks ago, the department let out word to the hotels that some action was imminent against alien functionaries in public places where patrons talk too much in this time of war, the Wardman Park and Carlton Hotels management dismissed approximately 20 from the dining rooms and bars. The Willard Hotel said it had watched the matter of aliens in its employ for some time past. At present, only six or seven are working there, it was said.

Mayflower to Lose 25

The Mayflower Hotel said that it must part with 25 waiters and two maids. The Shoreham Hotel will lose seven waiters.

Two of them at the Mayflower Hotel took loyalty for granted and didn't discuss it. One is H. R. Luethy, 39, who lives at 5510 Blair Road Northeast with his wife and two-year-old son and in the same house with a waiter discharged from the Carlton. He came to America in 1929 from the German Black Forest with a good education, speaking the dead language, Latin, and several other live ones. Waiting on tables was the one job he could get when he arrived.

His neglect in taking out papers was described by him as "plain negligence. You know how it is," he said; "we work hard, work, sleep, work and sleep." He and the waiter from the Carlton, established here, didn't want to leave. But they will have to, or find another kind of employment. The order applies only to the District.

Came From Bavaria

Andrew Senft, 33, of the hotel's cocktail lounge, lives at 3501 Thirteenth Street Northwest. He is from Bamberg, Bavaria, and arrived in America in 1929, like Luethy. He married an American citizen, filed first papers but didn't follow through. Senft and most all of the waiters at the hotel belong to the war bond group, it was said.

The order implied that the alien waiters were not so much responsible for the move as the patrons, many of whom have talked much and unwisely.

Jap Agent

Lesser Term Is Denied To Townsend

Justice T. Alan Goldsborough yesterday sent Ralph Townsend, the convicted Japanese agent, back to prison to serve out his term of 8 to 24 months for violation of the Foreign Agents Act.

Townsend pleaded for a lesser term, claiming that he did not mean to violate the law when he failed to report his connection with the Japanese propaganda agency called Jikoku Iinkai. Justice Goldsborough Goldsborough recalled that more than once he had rejected this argument before, offering to allow Townsend withdraw his plea of guilty and stand trial with his two American and one Japanese accomplices. They were convicted.

Special Prosecutors Albert E. Arent and Arthur B. Caldwell firmly opposed Townsend's petition.

Willumeit Questioned

Meanwhile the confessed Nazi-Jap spy conspirator, Dr. Otto Willumeit, was being questioned before the special grand jury on Axis agents.

Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney said the man was called to give evidence in connection with the protracted investigation of treasonable and seditious publications, a probe ordered by Attorney General Biddle several months ago.

The inquiry, which has reached into a dozen cities from coast to coast, has been under the direction of the chief of the criminal division, Wendell Berge.

Biddle Confers

Occupied as he has been with the current trial of eight Nazi spies, the Attorney General found time this week for a long conference with Berge, Solicitor General James Fahy, Maloney and Special Prosecutor John T. M. Reddan.

Maloney and Reddan refused to comment on the conference, except to say that the grand jurors would probably be ready to file a report within a fortnight.

Also before the grand jurors yesterday was Joseph P. Kamp, of the Constitutional Educational League, which has reprinted many speeches of Representative Clare E. Hoffman.

U. S. Rests Case Against Four Spies of abrasives for ruining fine-geared machinery, and firebombs in a dozen disguises, such as pencils, fountain pens, fragments of lumber and chunks of coal.

It was the ninth day of the trial. In a makeshift courtroom on the fifth floor of the Department of Justice Building. The prisoners, all but one of whom started the hearing without hope, were nearing the breaking point as the time approached for the judgment against them. Their sullen and defiant bearing was being displaced by the jitters.

Most upset was 22-year-old Herbert Haupt, whose father and mother, uncle and aunt and two childhood friends have confessed being confederates in the invasion. The father, Hans Max Haupt, was reported seriously ill in a mental hospital, where he is being held in Chicago.

Worn also by the long ordeal were the seven generals appointed by President Roosevelt to pass judgment upon the eight Germans. The commission has kept long hours every day since the trial began a week ago Wednesday. Even the holiday of last Sunday found the generals engrossed in law books and the documents of the hearing.

The rigid secrecy which the Army had thrown around the hearing appeared to be telling on those inside, rather than the public outside the guarded trial room. Gnawing at the composure of the military functionaries was impatience over rumors which got about by word of mouth and which the Army's own rule of secrecy left all concerned powerless to deny.

Annoying, too, to the military, were the details appearing in print, shrewdly inferred or otherwise learned by the several dozen reporters who are following the hearing.

The commission is eager to complete its job, but is unlikely to be able to do so before the end of next week; and it may be in session still longer.

The Government must finish the evidence against the four Germans who landed in Florida and the defense will then have a right to offer evidence of its own.

Search Fails To Confirm N. Y. Parachute Rumor

By International News Service

New York, July 17.—After a full day's careful investigation, the Eastern Defense Command and First Army announced tonight it had been unable to confirm that six "parachutes" had dropped to earth in the vicinity of Rhinebeck, N. Y.

The Army investigation is continuing, however, the announcement said.

First report of the parachutes came from a caretaker at the old John Jacob Astor estate near Rhinebeck, which is 10 miles north of President Roosevelt's home at Hyde Park. The caretaker reported to authorities he had sighted six "parachutists" about 4:45 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

An immediate inquiry was started by the FBI, State police and local authorities. Last night the Army took over the investigation, and in its statement tonight said it has no information to release at this time.

It was emphasized that the Army's statement was made merely to counteract widespread rumors that parachutes had been sighted in various parts of New York State.

Girl Found Slain in Cabin; Civic Leader Says He Did It

SLAIN GIRL BEFORE TRAGEDY—The slain Dorena Hammer and Leslie B. Gireth, held in connection with her death in San Leandro, Calif., ares hown together in this snapshot

By the Associated Press

San Leandro, Calif., July 17.—Pretty, 20-year-old Dorena Hammer was found shot to death in an elaborate motor court cabin today, and a wealthy Glendale jeweler who directed police to her body confessed he killed her as she slept because he feared scandal.

"I was afraid that our interest in each other might lead to scandal that would ruin her life," L. E. Dayton, Alameda County deputy district attorney, quoted debonair Leslie B. Gireth, 42, who earlier today telephoned Oakland police from Fresno, 200 miles south, that "I murdered a girl in San Leandro."

Miss Hammer, until recently a student at San Jose State College, had been studying meteorology to obtain an airline job. She had worked occasionally in Gireth's jewelry store.

Gireth was quoted by Dayton at Fresno as saying he made arrangements by telephone to meet Miss Hammer, and they took a cabin together as "Mr. L. B. Gireth and wife."

Shot Her Three Times

"We were infatuated with each other," Dayton quoted him. "Wednesday night was the anniversary of our love. So, as I stayed beside her as she slept, I decided to kill her because I had become convinced our relationship was ruining her life.

"Early Thursday I got out of bed, took the .25 caliber automatic pistol—she was still asleep—and I shot her three times."

Gireth remained at the cabin until midafternoon, he said, and then drove south. At Fresno, he decided to tell police.

The polite, well-goomed jeweler and civic leader earlier had brushed off requests for details with: "It's a long story and people wouldn't understand."

Beside the bed upon which the girl lay dead was a vase of red carnations, placed there, it was believed, after she was killed. On the table was a silver-framed photograph of Gireth. Penned on the back were the words "Dorena, my darling—humble words could never express how I love you, how I adore you. Always remember that—your Les."

A record of Debussy's romantic "Claire De Lune" was on the phonograph.

Miss Hammer had been shot twice through the temple and once through the breast. She had been dead two days. She wore only her pajama jacket.

It was 4 a. m. when Patrolman Harold J. Rossi received the telephone call from Fresno. "I murdered a girl in San Leandro," the man said. Rossi said he identified himself as Gireth.

Wife Suing for Divorce

Fresno officers arrested the jeweler in the lobby of his hotel. He was calm.

Recently his wife, Anna, brought suit for divorce, accusing Gireth of cruel and inhuman treatment. He was "not conventional in his desires," she asserted; told her she "didn't know how to love," and squandered money on other women. They married in 1929 and have two young sons.

Miss Hammer had several suitcases packed with clothing and personal effects. Among these were a number of amorous letters addressed to her and bearing Gireth's name. One, written June 7 of this year, said: "My Dearest Angel: I had a heavenly time last weekend, and hope for many, many more of them."

Another, dated October 19, 1941, said: "Dorena, my precious, you gave me your love and faith, my greatest treasure. I will guard them unceasingly and no one will ever take them away from me."

Give Aliens Chance To Show Loyalty, Urges U. S. Aide

Baltimore, July 17 (AP).—Addressing the National Association of Secretaries of State at its closing session here today, Earl G. Harrison, newly confirmed director of immigration, urged that aliens be given a chance to show faith.

As far back as February, he said, 60,000 Italian nationals and 8000 German nationals in this country had husbands or sons serving in the Nation's armed forces.

Harrison asked that the overwhelming majority of noncitizens who were loyal to America and its cause and "are eager to assist in the war effort" be given the opportunity.

"In the first place," Harris said, "and most important of all, we cannot take chances. In the second place we cannot succumb to any hysterical distrust of the disloyal minority in any manner that would leave needless scars on the loyalty or faith of millions.

Finally, we cannot afford on the positive side," Harrison said, "to forget the vast potential contribution of the foreign-born citizen, either of today or of tomorrow, not only to our economy, but to our morale."

Lease-Lend Aid Hit New High During June

President Roosevelt disclosed yesterday that lend-lease assistance to the United Nations and other countries eligible for aid reached 708 million dollars in June, the highest monthly total yet.

This compared with 662 million dollars in May and brought the total since lend-lease assistance was inaugurated, March 11, 1941, to $5,205,000,000.

The President told a press conference that of this latter sum, 59 per cent was accounted for by goods actually transferred; that is, exported or at points of embarkation in this country. Articles in process of manufacture accounted for 24 per cent and services here and abroad represented 17 per cent.

Wergin, Wife Weep as Court Arraigns Accused Spy Hosts

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 17.—Tall, powerfully built Otto Richard Wergin broke down and wept today when he and his wife and another woman were arraigned on Federal charges of assisting Herbert Hans Haupt, one of eight Nazi saboteurs on trial in Washington.

Wergin and his wife, Kate, and Mrs. Lucille Froehling pleaded innocent and were held in $50,000 bail each for a continued hearing August 5. Complaints charged they did "unlawfully receive, relieve, comfort, aid and assist" Haupt after the young saboteur, according to Government charges, landed from a German submarine June 17 at Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla.

Prisoners Shield Faces

When the three prisoners were marched from the United States marshal's office to the hearing room of United States Commissioner Edwin K. Walker they shielded their faces. Wergin stood up first as the commissioner read the complaint, then mumbled "not guilty" and shook his head.

While Mrs. Wergin was standing for the reading of the complaint, tears streamed from her husband's eyes. Then while Mrs. Froehling stood, in turn, Wergin reached behind her, seized his wife's hand and kissed it.

Mrs. Froehling Composed

Mrs. Wergin began to weep, too. Only Mrs. Froehling kept her composure, telling the commissioners crisply, "no sir, not guilty." A few moments later they were returned to the United States Marshal's custody under supervision of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Similar complaints, all signed by an FBI agent, were filed against Mrs. Froehling's husband, Walter Wilhelm Froehling, and Mr. and Mrs. Hans Max Haupt, parents of young Haupt. United States Attorney J. Albert Woll said these three, all in custody, would be arraigned some time later. He explained that Mrs. Haupt and Froehling were "out of town," presumably in Washington for the saboteur trial, and that Haupt was ill.

8 Men Indicted In Illinois War Fraud Cleanup

By the Associated Press

Peoria, Ill., July 17.—Eight men and two supply companies were indicted by a Federal court grand jury today on charges of conspiring to defraud the War Department by collusive bidding on supplies for the Sangamon Ordnance Plant under construction near Springfield.

The indictments, first war fraud charges returned in Illinois, were a part of a Nation-wide campaign announced earlier this week by Attorney General Biddle.

District Attorney Howard L. Doyle said the conspiracy involved collusive bidding on office supplies and equipment valued at approximately $4000 but added "the scheme might have resulted in fraud running into tens of thousands of dollars if the Army had not nipped it in the bud."

Among those indicted were Roy N. Lennstrum of Chicago, former director of purchases for the James Stewart Corporation, contractor at the Sagamon plant. The indictment charged that Lennstrum submitted fraudulent reports on bids for equipment so that the Simmons Office Equipment & Supply Co. of Springfield would have a monopoly on sale of such equipment.

The Simmons Co. and the Standard Printing Co. of Hannibal, Mo., were the two companies named in the indictment. Others named with Lennstrum were:

W. N. Curry of Springfield, president of the Simmons Co.; Frank Simmons, Springfield, vice president of the Simmons Co.; Robert Simmons, Springfield, sales representative of the Simmons Co.; William R. Shaver, Springfield, a partner in the Springfield Blueprint Co., and R. Scott Roland, John G. Gentry and J. O. Hennesy, all of Hannibal, sales representatives of the Standard Printing Co.

Soldier Faces Gallows for 3 Aussie Killings

By the Associated Press

Melbourne, July 17.—Private Edward J. Leonski, former New York City grocery clerk and self-styled Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, was condemned to the gallows by a United States military court today for the strangulation murders of three Melbourne women.

The 23-year-old defendant who was quoted by a witness as saying he throttled his first victim "because she had a lovely voice and I wanted that voice," heard the verdict without a change of his mask-like expression, but smirked as he was led away.

It took the 10-man tribunal a scant 50 minutes to reach its verdict after listening to the prosecution describe Leonski as "callous, indifferent, cunning and vicious."

The sentence is subject to review by the commanding general of United States armed forces in Australia.

Witnesses described Leonski as a "psycopathic personality" and heavy drinker who on occasions drank a concoction of beer, ketchup, ice cream and pepper.

The defense contended the evidence was insufficient and said confessions signed by Leonski had been "steered by the police to conform with what they believed the facts of the case."

In his final argument, the prosecutor said:

"Leonski, by the fiendish quality of this crime, demonstrated himself to be a person unfit to live. In the eyes of the people of this Nation the American system of justice is on trial.

"Every citizen of the United States must have felt a feeling of complete revulsion not only because of the character of the crimes but also because the accused cast a foul blot on the record of the service in which he was engaged."

Leonski was arrested in mid-May after the body of Miss Gladys Hosking, 40, University Chemistry School secretary, was found near an Army camp.

Airborne Army to Be World's Best—Arnold

The United States is creating an air commando force that will exceed "anything of the kind the world has yet seen," Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, commanding general of the Army Air Forces, revealed last night.

Including parachute troops and glider and transport plane combat groups, the American air commandos will constitute a "self-contained force," fully equipped and supplied, "able and trained to strike the enemy where he is least prepared," General Arnold declared.

And after completing their missions, the air-borne attack forces and glider pilots will be prepared to withdraw, the air chief revealed. How that would be accomplished was not disclosed, "for military reasons." But it was pointed out that United States Army planes, while in flight, have been successful in picking up gliders from the ground.

Disclosing that headquarters for the air commandos, listed officially as the "Troop Carrier Command," has been established at Stout Field, Ind., with Col. Fred S. Borum, Army Air Corps, commanding, General Arnold warned against expectation of immediate accomplishments.

"I emphasize," he said, "that this air-borne attack force does not give us an instantaneous or cheap solution to our war problem. Its creation is calling for a stupendous effort. The time when it will attain its full power is still a long way off."

Practical training of these highly mobile units working together is already under way, General Arnold said.

"Glider pilots and air-borne combat troops will be in the forefront of attacks," he added. "The importance of these swiftly moving combat teams cannot be overestimated.

"This will be a self-contained force whose soldiers, equipment and supplies are all transported by air. It will be able and trained to strike the enemy where he is least prepared.

"Although many details must be kept secret concerning its exact size, composition, tactics, objectives and when and where it will strike it can now be revealed that in size, equipment and fire power the air-borne army ultimately will exceed anything of the kind the world has yet seen.

"We have the wealth, the material, the fuel, the industrial facilities and the mechanical and fighting skill to create an air-borne attack force above and beyond anything that is possible by the Axis nations."

Secret Parley to Hit Canadian Sinkings

Ottawa, July 17 (AP).—Prime Minister Mackenzie King announced today in the House of Commons that a secret session would be held tomorrow to discuss war incidents in the lower St. Lawrence River.

Two Canadian ships have been sunk by enemy submarines in the St. Lawrence River and three were sunk recently in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Only yesterday, the Prime Minister refused a request for a closed session asked by J. S. Roy, Gaspe Independent, and the Conservative leader, R. B. Hanson. Roy charged there had been dereliction of duty by "persons responsible for protection of the coastal waters."

the high temperature earlier in the afternoon. The Weather Bureau forecast "continued warm with gentle to moderate winds" today.

Thousands of persons thronged to the city's parks, many of them sleeping there during the night. Capacity crowds turned out for open-air performance at the Watergate and harbor police reported all available canoes on the waterfront had been hired. Excursion boats plying the Potomac were loaded from stem to stern. Movie theaters and other air-conditioned places did a brisk business.

Although the temperature dropped to 84 at midnight, Washingtonians were afforded little relief, for the humidity continued to run high. At midnight the humidity reading was 76.

OPA Compromise Plan Is Stalled

only could not report the bill, but failed to obtain consent to report a disagreement, so the House itself could vote directly on the issue.

The House Appropriations chairman said last night he would try either to obtain a seventh signature for 120 million dollars or a majority vote to lay the disagreement before the House.

House conferees accepted the Senate ban on use of any of the OPA money to pay subsidies to industries caught between price ceilings and rising costs, but the Senate amendment was modified to permit possible indirect subsidies. Administration spokesmen discounted the significance of this amendment, pointing out that with 120 million dollars Henderson would barely have sufficient funds to maintain his own agency, much less use any of the money for subsidies.

House and Senate conferees failed to agree on the Senate's amendment restating provisions of the original Price Control Act on the 110 per cent of parity farm price control formula, and this will be carried to the House for a separate vote. Language specifically subjecting processed farm commodities to the formula was previously stricken out in the Senate.

Second Elopement Flusters Lana—She Almost Drops Ring

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

MARRIED IN LAS VEGAS—Lana Turner, who zoomed to movie fame in a sweater, and Stephen Crane, former Chicago and New York broker, were married yesterday in Las Vegas less than three hours after eloping from Hollywood. The ceremony was performed by Judge George E. Marshall, who also married Lana to Artie Shaw two years ago

By the Associated Press

Las Vegas, Nev., July 17.—Lana Turner, the little redhead who achieved fame as a curvaceous sweater girl, then became famous in the movies, played a return engagement before Judge George F. Marshall today.

She was married to Stephen Crane, Beverly Hills, Calif., merchandising man, in a surprise elopement. But the groom was about the only change in script from her 1940 elopement here with Band Leader Artie Shaw.

Hardly anyone in Hollywood knew that 22-year-old Lana was romancing with Crane, 27, a former Chicago and New York broker. Her studio said she didn't even know him, but Lana said they'd been serious four months. They even had a Beverly Hills apartment leased. They flew up from Hollywood, were married, had lunch and returned by air in midafternoon.

Rift No Surprise

Lana also flew up with Shaw for their ceremony, which really startled Hollywood. Miss Turner and Shaw just had feuded throughout a picture. They didn't surprise many, however, when they separated a few months later.

Lana nervously fumbled through the double-ring ceremony with Crane. She had dimculty placing the ring on the groom's finger, but made it on about the fifth attempt.

There wasn't any fumbling, though, when she embraced him, repeatedly.

"It's wonderful," she sighed.

No, Not Yet

She wanted Starlet Linda Darnell, 18, to make it a double ceremony with Linda's boy friend of more than a year. Publicity Man Alan Gordon, but the beauteous brunette spiked that with a simple "not yet."

Gordon said they discussed marriage en route but, well . . . They settled on being just bridesmaid and best man for the time being.

Miss Turner charged cruelty in divorcing Shaw. Crane divorced his first wife, Indianapolis society girl, Carole Kurtz, on the same charge last year in Los Angeles.

Gordon and Miss Darnell arranged a wedding party for Lana and her groom at a Hollywood night club tonight. The cake will be adorned with the figure of a bride—wearing a veil and a sweater.

Alley Numbers Must Be Posted For Blackout

Street numbers on alley entrances should be installed immediately for the guidance of air raid wardens in the forthcoming surprise blackout, Coordinator John Russell Young warned last night.

Young said there is already a city ordinance in effect requiring street numbers to be placed at the alley entrance of every house in the District. Although the old statute was for the benefit of garbage collectors, it is just as useful for air raid wardens, and every police precinct station has been ordered to make a survey of alleys in its area to see that the order is being carried out.

The necessity for such numbers during a blackout has been pointed out after several of the recent air-raid tests, when the wardens could see lighted back windows but had difficulty in exactly identifying the offending houses. At the insistence of Chief Air Raid Warden William J. Mileham, the Corporation Counsel's Office looked into the possibilities of enforcement and found the solution in the old garbage regulation.

Other than the alley numbers, no new regulations for a blackout have been announced for the surprise test. Traffic hazard, emphasized by the fatality in the Maryland State-wide test Wednesday night, is the chief concern of defense officials. They reiterated last night the necessity for strict observance of the orders that pedestrians must get off the streets, private vehicles to pull over to the curb, and drivers of emergency vehicles to creep along at 15 miles per hour.

Driver of Bus Involved in Crash Draws $50 Fine

John R. Parrish, the driver of one of two Capital Transit buses that collided June 16 resulting in injury to 31 passengers, was fined $50 in Municipal Court yesterday for passing a red light.

Parrish, who lives in Takoma Park, Md., told the court he had already entered the intersection at Vermont Avenue and U Streets Northwest when the yellow caution light came on. He said he did not see the other bus as it emerged from Vermont Avenue, southbound.

Policeman Wade B. Riley of the accident investigation unit, testified before Judge John P. McMahon that Parrish had told him after the accident that the brakes had failed to operate, but the officer added that a test of the brakes the following day revealed that they had been in working order.

Dies Asks Congress' Aid On Libel Suits

By the Associated Press

Chairman Dies (Democrat) of the House Committee on Un-American Activities has asked that Congress pay the expenses he has incurred in connection with two libel suits brought against him.

Disclosing he had submitted bills for $611 to the House Accounts Committee, Dies said yesterday his purpose was to obtain an expression of policy as to whether Congress desired that legal expenses incurred by committee members through their official actions should be borne by the Government or by the individuals involved.

"If it should be held that each member must pay out of his own pockets these expenses," the Texan said, "the first thing you know there will be thousands of libel actions filed against us and we will all be bankrupt."

The $611, Dies said, represented the costs in two suits, one filed by David Vaughan, Government executive, and the other by J. A. Potts of Richmond, Va. Vaughan withdrew his action after Dies apologized and said it was a case of mistaken identity when he accused Vaughan of affiliation with a "Communist front organization." Dies said Potts' case still is pending in the courts.

PUC Tentatively Adopts New Rules of Procedure

Rules of procedure before the Public Utilities Commission, in preparation since last November, were tentatively adopted by the commission last night, and the committee which had drafted them was asked to begin work upon a definite set of regulations for the taxi industry.

Procedures of the public utilities commissions of many States were studied in the preparation of the 20-odd pages of rulings, which PUC Chairman Gregory Hankin said he hoped would serve as a model not only for the District but for any other utilities commission that wanted to profit by the committee's survey.

Some of the points of the new rulings are:

1. The PUC may disqualifying from appearing or practicing before it persons it considers lacking in qualifications of representation or of character, or whose conduct at a hearing amounts to contempt.

2. All pre-hearing conferences shall be open to the public.

3. Any individual appearing before the PUC in a representative capacity may be required to establish his authority to act in such capacity.

4. No pleading shall be dismissed for formal defects.

The questions of interveners, in formal hearings, rules of evidence, and other legal technicalities were treated in the study, designed for the guidance of the public in its dealings with the PUC. Mimeographed copies, recommended to be in format similar to the rules of procedure before the Maritime Commission, will be available to the public some time next week, it was announced.

Members of the committee included E. Barrett Prettyman, chairman; F. Lloyd Awalt, Donald C. Beelar, James P. Davison, Ringgold Hart, William K. Laws, Robert A. Maurer, Clarence A. Miller, Ralph A. Van Orsdel, Corporation Counsel Richmond Keech, Hankin, and Elmo Milligan and Sarah E. Wilson of the PUC staff.

State Dept. Annex Plan Unsatisfactory

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Fine Arts Commission yesterday sent back for revision a proposed design for an annex to the State Department Building.

Meeting jointly, the two groups considered the architectural plans in relation to Lafayette Park, which the structure would adjoin. The rejection can hardly delay the project since construction funds have been impounded and priorities on materials have never been granted.

Thomas S. Settle, secretary, said that the planning commission "felt that the building should be treated more adequately architecturally."

Chairman Gilmore D. Clarke of the Fine Arts Commission explained simply that the design, submitted by George Howe, supervising architect of the Public Buildings Administration, was not satisfactory to either commission.

The building, which it is virtually certain will not be erected before the war's end, would fit into the western half of the block bounded by Jackson Place, Seventeenth Street, Pennsylvania Avenue and H Streets.

Now occupying the site are the Court of Claims and a group of office buildings, shops and stores whose tenants were dispossessed last January on three weeks notice after the Government hurriedly acquired the land through condemnation.

Yesterday's joint meeting also discussed the proposed extension of the Treasury Department annex, on Madison Place and facing Lafayette Park. The building would occupy the present sites of the old Belasco Theater, now used as a warehouse, and the Cosmos Club, whose home is Government-owned.

Models embracing various alternate plans for eventual treatment of Lafayette Square and its perimeter were submitted to the joint meeting by William T. Partridge, consultant to the planning body. None was wholly satisfactory, said Settle.

Convening separately, the Fine Arts Commission approved a design by George Snowden for a China Service Medal, requested by the Navy, and discussed with National Park Service officials plans for a Lee Boulevard bridge over Boundary Channel.

Gen. Spaatz Plays Sir Walter Raleigh To British Queen

London, July 17 (AP).—Maj. Gen. Carl Spaatz, commander of United States Army Air Forces in Europe, is no less gallant and considerably more practical than Sir Walter Raleigh.

Sir Walter, 360 years ago, threw his cost on a mud puddle for Queen Elizabeth to step on.

Yesterday, when the present Queen Elizabeth was visiting the American Air Forces, it began to rain. General Spaatz shed his coat and placed it over the Queen's shoulders with the remark:

"You majesty, this makes you a major general of the American Air Forces."

House Is Urged To Allot OPA Rent-Control Fund

Charging that the disruption of Office of Price Administration rent ceilings would be "disastrous, financially and morally," the National Negro Council last night urged the House to approve appropriations for the OPA already authorized by the Senate to guarantee enforcement of rent control.

At the same time the group, meeting at Garnet Patterson High School, Tenth and U Streets Northwest, urged representatives of all Negro organizations to attend a special convention in Chicago July 22—the same day that real estate owners, agents and landlords are scheduled to assemble there to "challenge the OPA rent control."

"Nothing," the council declared, "must interfere with the protection of the American people and their homes from runaway and spiraling of rental costs."

Symphony Pays Tribute To Gershwin

By Ray C. B. Brown

Sylvan Levin conducts the National Symphony Orchestra in the Seventy-eighth "Sunset Symphony Concert" at the Potomac Watergate on Friday night. Soloists: Sidney Foster, piano; Dorothy Sarnov, soprano; Howard Vanderberg, baritone. Program of compositions by George Gershwin: A Cuban Overture, Piano Concerto in F, Strike Up the Band, An American in Paris, Rhapsody in Blue, Three Songs from "Porgy and Bess."

Thronging the Potomac Watergate in tribute to a popular native composer, thousands of auditors assembled last evening for the George Gershwin memorial concert, which has become an integral part of the National Symphony Orchestra's summer series. The size of the gathering was in itself a testimony to the place occupied in the public mind by the author of the "Rhapsody in Blue," whose death in September of 1937 cut short at the age of 39 the talent which was taking a new turn in the folk opera, "Porgy and Bess." Moreover, it was a manifestation of loyalty under taxing circumstances, for the heat of the day was slow in subsiding, and the atmosphere was close and stifling at the sunset hour.

BROWN

It was not long, however, before a breeze began to move fitfully up the river to relieve the oppressive humidity, and the beauty of the concert site had its usual soothing effect upon strained nerves. There were no glories of color in the wake of the sun, for the sky was clear, save for a few wisps of cirrus cloud, and it took on in the twilight hour an opalescent milkiness of constantly changing tints. When darkness had merged all the chatoyante hues into a deep blue, a crescent moon hung over the barge with a lambent radiance.

Sylvan Levin, back again from Philadelphia as guest conductor, appropriately began the concert with "Strike Up the Band," that lively invitation to musical festivity. This was followed by "A Cuban Overture" and the piano concerto in F, with Sidney Foster, a forceful young executant, as soloist. His performance had rhythmic vitality and a percussive quality of tone, and his technical handling of the work was secure. The orchestra adapted itself to the jazz idiom with a contagious spirit.

After the intermission came that curious piece of homesickness called "An American in Paris," which is entirely descriptive of a traveler's superficial view and not in the least suggestive of the city on the Seine. Even the one bit of realism in the score was missing on this occasion, for the klaxon that squawked in the right places did not sound like a Parisian taxi horn, which was, and perhaps still is, unique among instruments.

Two members of the Philadelphia Opera Company, Dorothy Sarnov and Howard Vanderberg, offered vocal selections from "Porgy and Bess," the soprano taking "Summertime" and the baritone "I Got Plenty o' Nuttin," and the two joining in the duet from the second act. The concert closed with a rousing performance of the Rhapsody in Blue in which Mr. Foster was the capable soloist. Naturally, there were demands for an addition to the program. Mr. Vanderberg sang "It Ain't Necessarily So," and the duet was repeated, and the march-out was "Strike Up the Band."

When the compositions of George Gershwin fall into historical perspective, they will probably be judged as perfect type specimens of the jazz age. One can already see that their idiom is decidedly dated, and that is no reflection upon the competence of the composer. He caught the accents and the emotions of a particular phase of our national life, and presented them truthfully, just as Stephen Foster did in his time.

Salvaged Fat Price Ceiling Contemplated

A Nation-wide ceiling on the price of salvaged household fats is being contemplated as a result of variation in prices paid throughout the country, and even in different sections of the same city, a WPB spokesman said last night.

The disparity of prices offered in Washington was quoted by the spokesman as one of the factors in the WPB consideration. Some meat dealers, it was said, pay more for white or cream-colored grease than for brown or grayish grease, because the renderers in turn offer more for the fresher looking product. WPB says there should be one price for all usable fat.

At any rate, the butchers were paying the approved rate of 1 cent less to the customer than the renderers paid. In Washington the locally stated rates are supposed to be 3 cents to the housewife and 4 cents to the dealer, the penny extra as a recompense for handling.

Housewives who have been just giving their salvaged fats as a contribution to the war effort were advised that what small profit there would be in getting the fat as a gift, rather than as a purchase, would accrue to the grocer or the renderer, rather than to the Government.

Both the local and national salvage committees reiterated that the fat collections is not a "drive," but is a program set to last through the duration of the war. Of an estimated two billion pounds of fat wasted annually, it is hoped that at least 500 million pounds would be turned in each year at the 300,000 butcher and grocery shops cooperating in the salvage program.

Senate Passes Barge Canal, Pipelines Bill

The 93-million-dollar barge canal-pipe line bill, designed to relieve the Eastern gasoline drought, cleared the Senate yesterday after opponents of the measure came within a hair's-breadth of striking out the canal.

The Senate tied, 30-30, on an amendment to eliminate authority for a 44-million-dollar barge canal across northern Florida. Vice President Wallace, breaking his second tie in as many days, cast his vote for the canal. The Senate then passed the House-approved bill, viva voce.

Senator Bailey (Democrat) of North Carolina, who with Senator Vandenberg (Republican) of Michigan led the fight against the canal, contended to the end that the "ditch" couldn't be completed in less than three years, wouldn't contribute a gallon of gasoline to the gas-hungry East and would waste funds needed for vital defense measures.

Barkley Brings Backing

But Senator Pepper (Democrat) of Florida, Senate sponsor of the measure, insisted it could be built in less time than the 26-month estimate of Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, chief of Army Engineers. Senator Pepper maintained that failure to approve the original 1935 Florida ship canal, twice sidetracked by Congress, had cost this country "hundreds of millions of dollars" in ship losses, and hundreds of lives.

Strong Administration support swung to the measure after Senate Majority Leader Barkley returned from a White House conference. Senator Barkley said the President felt that even if the canal was not completed before the end of the war, it would form a part of the public works reservoir needed after hostilities end.

It was Senator Bailey who moved to strike out the barge canal authorization. He lost on the tie. Although Wallace's vote was not needed, the Vice President cast it against the motion, and made the vote 31-30.

Clark Tied It Up

Before recapitulation of the vote, opponents led, 30 to 29, but Senator Clark (Democrat) of Idaho, arrived in time to tie the vote.

The canal, 125 feet wide and 12 feet deep, would reach from the St. Johns River in the neighborhood of Palatka across Florida to the vicinity of Port Inglis, connecting the existing Atlantic and Gulf intracoastal canal.

Another 26 million dollars would be spent to deepen and extend the existing Gulf waterway from Port St. Joe, Fla., to Corpus Christi, Tex., eventually providing an inland route from the Mexican border to New Jersey.

But the only prompt petroleum relief for the East in the measure was provided in a 10-million-dollar authorization for one or more pipe lines across northern Florida and a 13-million-dollar authorization for a pipe line from Mississippi's Tinsley oil fields to Charleston or Savannah. The Florida pipeline, over the approximate route of the canal, was designed to carry emergency supplies of oil from the Gulf to the Atlantic intracoastal route until the connecting canal can be completed.

Vandenberg Fights

Senator Vandenberg vainly contended that the President already had authority to build the pipelines and contracts already have been let for construction of one of them at lesser cost.

Pepper said that if the canal "was finished today we could defy all the navies and submarines on earth." When it is completed he said tankers, supplemented by barges across Florida, could deliver petroleum over a route safe from U-boats from Texas to New Jersey. Senator Andrews (Democrat) of Florida joined Pepper in his fight for the measure.

The Senate agreed to an amendment by Senator Bailey vesting jurisdiction over the proposed pipelines in the Petroleum Coordinator, rather than the War Department.

The bill goes back to the House for action on minor Senate changes in the original House bill.

Public Gets Guarantee of Soap Quality

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Price Administrator Leon Henderson yesterday grappled with the problem of maintaining quality under price ceilings by issuing a regulation which his office said will guarantee American consumers that the 500 million dollars they spend this year on soap will buy the same quality and quantity they are now getting.

This was the first regulation dealing exclusively with size and quality of a commodity. It sets the types of soap now being sold as minimum standards. All kinds of soap are covered, and no reduction in the size of cake or package, or deterioration in quality or "serviceability" can be made.

Although the regulation, effective July 21, covers only manufacturers, the benefits will reach consumers since retail prices are frozen.

Henderson pointed out that sharp competition in industry, coupled with frozen prices, raises the possibility of evasion of maximum prices. One manufacturer could reduce the size of his product, or lower its quality, and this would soon be imitated by his competitors, the result being, in effect, a "hidden" price increase.

The problem is complicated by the industry's practice of dividing the country into half a dozen marketing areas. The types of soap sold differ widely among these areas. Today's regulation bans the sale in one area of types or sizes not sold there before.

The Price Administrator emphasized that the regulation permits distribution of improved types if they sell at the same price as those they replace. He expressed belief that minimum standards would benefit both the householder and manufacturer and would be welcomed by them.

WPB Official Pledges Publie Rubber for Essential Driving

By Robert De Vore

Post Staff Writer

Controversies among exponents of various processes for making synthetic rubber and resulting confusion in the public mind "has not in the least" distracted Federal agencies from pushing the Government's synthetic program "to completion at the earliest possible moment," Arthur B. Newhall, the War Production Board's rubber coordinator, declared yesterday.

Replying to critics of the program, Newhall promised that there will be enough rubber for "essential driving" but not enough for pleasure. He emphasized that rubber supplies could be made to last only if all means of conservation are used, including car sharing.

Newhall's statement, however, coupled with testimony of Stanley Crossland, vice president of the Rubber Reserve Co. before the Senate Rubber Investigating Subcommittee, provided fresh material for the squabble between advocates of alcohol and petroleum processes for making synthetic rubber.

Better Methods Found

New and better methods for production of synthetic rubber from petroleum, Newhall said, now make it possible to cut the amount of strategic materials used in the petroleum process to that required for alcohol.

Crossland told the Senate subcommittee, meanwhile, that alcohol manufacturing costs have now been reduced to the level of petroleum which formerly was cheaper.

Petroleum and alcohol, said Newhall, are "practically on an equal basis."

When Crossland made his statement to the subcommittee, Senator Norris (Independent) of Nebraska, critic of WPB and the Rubber Reserve Co., for failure to make greater utilization of grain alcohol, blurted:

"It is evident that you obtained all of your information from the class representing the petroleum interests."

Norris, Gillette Criticize

Mr. Norris and Senator Gillette (Democrat) of Iowa, subcommittee chairman, joined in criticizing Crossland for the alacrity with which Rubber Reserve went to work to study the proposal of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey for manufacture of Flexon, butyl-type synthetic, with "makeshift" equipment.

The Flexon process, remarked Mr. Gillette, was "presented only last week, and already it is accepted and your agents are prospecting for critical material for such plants."

Gillette observed that the new Standard process was the only new process under intensive study by the Government agency for smashing rubber plants.

Norris Questions Crossland

Crossland was asked by Senator Norris why Standard's representatives "weren't kicked out the window like you did the Nebraska fellows?" The Senator referred to unsuccessful attempts by a group from his State to get priorities and Government contracts for plants to make rubber from alcohol produced from surplus grain.

"We have given consideration to every process that has been presented; we didn't kick anyone out," Crossland replied.

Newhall, in a letter drafted to reply to "many inquiries about the present status" of the rubber program, said the Government has settled on production of 800,000 tons a year of synthetic rubber. All but 100,000 tons of the program will be Buna S, for which 30 per cent of the butadiene, principal raw material, will be made from alcohol.

"The present program has been fixed at this amount . . . because the amount of raw material required to build plants to use any of the processes is limited and the amount allotted is all that can be spared at this time to be taken away from other critical needs in the war program."

Darr to Speak On Delegate Plan

Sefton Darr, former president of the District Bar Association, will speak on the proposed election of a District delegate to the House of Representatives at an open meeting of the District Legislative Council on Tuesday at 12 noon at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K Streets.

Representative George A. Paddock, author of the bill to give the District nonvoting representation in the House, will be present to answer questions about that measure. Representatives of various civic and professional organizations without membership in the legislative council have been invited to attend. No action on the proposed legislation will be taken, for the council functions only as an information agency for its constituent bodies.

Dealers Ask Minimum On Gas Prices

direct OPA assistance on the problem of dealer financing, but this phase of the program is to be given further consideration with the possibility that other Federal agencies may be asked to consider the threatened plight of dealers.

Independents were represented at the conference with Dean by a delegation from the Eastern States Conference of Gasoline Dealers, headed by John Dressler, president of the New Jersey Gasoline Retailers Association, and Sol Herzog, counsel for the Eastern States Conference.

In other gasoline rationing developments yesterday:

Senator George (Democrat) of Georgia stated that responsible representatives of large oil companies told him that payment of Government subsidies to meet increased transportation costs soon would assure a sufficient flow of oil into the East to make rationing unnecessary. George also disclosed that a Federal "war service" tax of 1½ cents a gallon on petroleum products has been suggested to absorb the cost of subsidies. The proposal may be submitted to his Senate Finance Committee, if the Treasury Department approves it, Mr. George said.

Price Rise to Be Killed

House Majority Leader McCormack (Democrat) of Massachusetts said he has been assured by Price Administrator Henderson that the recent 2½ cents a gallon gas price increase will be removed soon.

The Office of Price Administration warned motorists that many applications for supplementary gasoline rations are "incomplete, incorrect or vague" and, therefore, are being rejected by local rationing boards. The need for more gasoline than is allowed by the "A" ration books must be definitely shown with precise information on necessary mileage and the distance driven by each car used by a car-sharing club.

"Even if you are a 'preferred' user, you must fill out the application completely," OPA stated. The fact that you are a doctor, a minister or a war worker does not free you from proving your case."

A number of incorrectly filled out applications has been received in the Rockville area of Montgomery County, it was learned.

WPB Stands By Plan

While independent dealers persisted in their protest against elimination of the supply restriction, a WPB official declared that there is no present intention of WPB to back down on its decision to base deliveries to retailers on the amount of business done in ration coupons.

If rationing should reduce gasoline consumption as much as officials hope it will, it was explained, there will not be enough business to go around anyway. The result will be, it is expected, that retailers in metropolitan areas where the demand is heavy will have plenty of business, providing their stations are favorably located. Stations in rural areas where traffic is light will suffer.

Flaws in Scheme

WPB's objection to the 30 per cent limitation on supplies is that it fails to provide dealers in populous areas with enough gasoline to meet demands of necessary drivers while other dealers have ample supplies to meet normal business demands.

Motorists hunting for stations with gasoline to sell have been needlessly consuming fuel and tires, in WPB's view.

Under terms of the delivery limitation order, supplies to dealers in the rationed area were limited to a maximum of 50 per cent of "normal gallonage." The decision to rescind the order was announced by WPB Chairman Donald M. Nelson.

House Group Speeds Law to End Contract 'Sales Engineering'

By Frank Kelley

Copyright, 1942, New York Tribune, Inc.

Alexander H. Stone, former $4200-a-year Federal Housing Administration employe, was indicted here yesterday by a Federal grand jury on charges of receiving $27,074.56 as 5 per cent commissions on Navy Department contracts totaling $541,491 while still employed by the Federal Government.

Simultaneously, the House Naval Affairs Committee acted to stop the "scandalous flow" of public funds into the pockets of so-called "sales engineers" by approving unanimously legislation prohibiting payment of contingent fee commissions to solicitors of Navy contracts. Chairman Carl Vinson (Democrat) of Georgia, said an amendment would be offered on the House floor extending the bill's penalties to all Government contracts.

The measure would make it a criminal offense, punishable by a $5000 fine or six months' imprisonment, or both, either to pay or to receive such commissions or fees or to agree to pay them. It is an outgrowth of hearings which disclosed that many "sales engineers" in Washington were profiting extravagantly from fees which manufacturers could have saved by dealing directly with the Government. Eventually the fees come out of taxpayers' pockets.

"Only the Surface Scratched"

The Naval Affairs Committee's action was followed by a report from Representative Charles I. Faddis (Democrat) of Pennsylvania, chairman of a special Military Affairs Subcommittee that continued investigation by his group, reveals a total of $1,815,366 in fees by 19 agents on contracts totaling $16,793,850.

"Only the surface has been scratched," Representative Faddis said, emphasizing that it is significant that large contractors still utilize the services of agents instead of procuring war orders directly.

Attorney General Francis Biddle announced the indictment of Stone, a resident of Washington, on 12 counts charging fraud between August 6, 1940, and March 1, 1941, while employed as an underwriting supervisor by the Federal Housing Administration, he received a total of $27,074.56 on Navy contracts obtained during that period by the Lionel Corp. of Irvington, N. J., former manufacturers of toy electric trains, for the production of navigation equipment.

The indictment is one of a series sought by the Justice Department's war frauds unit under Tom C. Clark, chief, and John Darsey, assistant chief, and under the joint supervision of Assistant Attorneys General Wendell Berge, in charge of the criminal division, and Thurman Arnold, in charge of the anti-trust division.

Other Cases Expected Soon

Berge said other cases might be expected soon here, and "the effect of prosecution of cases of this character is expected to be millions of dollars in savings to the Government."

Stone was indicted under section 203, title 18, United States Code which prohibits a Government employe from receiving compensation for services relating to any contract to which the United States is a party. Upon conviction he would be subject to a maximum fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for not more than two years and afterward would be barred from holding office under the Federal Government.

Stone testified before the House Naval Affairs Committee on May 29 that he had earned more than $600,000 in commissions on Navy contracts. Testimony before the committee revealed that at Christmas, 1940, and again in 1941, he had the Lionel Corporation send nine sets of toy trains to key Naval officers in the procurement divisions of the Navy Department. The record also showed that 11 officers in Navy procurement received expensive wallets last Christmas.

President, George Confer on Tax Bill

over a chart contrasting the short revenue yield of the House bill with the $8,700,000,000 recommended by the Treasury.

George later told reporters there was no detailed discussion of the House bill, and that beyond saying he wanted special tax privileges eliminated and equality of taxation the President did NOT commit himself to specific tax rates or plans.

Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of the "special privileges" complained of by Secretary Morgenthau in his original plea to the House committee were tax-exempt State and local securities, percentage depletion allowances granted owners of mines and oil wells and the option allowed married couples to file separate tax returns.

30 Millions Would Be Added

The House committee rejected all three of the Treasury recommendations for elimination of these. Restoration of the "special privileges" taxes in the Senate would add a grand total of 700 million dollars to the bill.

Mandatory joint income tax returns, most remunerative of the Treasury proposals (estimated to yield 420 million dollars) was tossed out of the House bill in a last-minute committee upset and was believed certain to become a pivot Senate issue.

Representative Boehne (Democrat) of Indiana, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, told the House yesterday that proposals to prohibit or penalize separate returns by married couples were defeated in committee "by those who opposed what I call an unequal tax treatment of Federal taxpayers."

Evade Their Proper Tax

"Common sense dictates that an income tax is levied against an individual person receiving an individual compensation," said Boehne. "By dividing all incomes, husbands and wives in community-property States are able to evade their proper tax liability, because the income falls into a lower tax bracket than the same total income would fall to an individual residing in a non-community property State . . . The failure to include a provision in the pending bill has not settled the question."

As the House neared a final vote Monday on its tax bill, with no opportunity to change it save in one motion to recommit, Senator George said he would open Senate hearings Thursday with Morgenthau and other Treasury officials present.

The Georgian, who has previously indicated his preference for "induced" purchase of war bonds by granting special tax credits to stimulate sales, meanwhile, promised Morgenthau he would "go along" with his voluntary program only for this calendar year.

Reasons Given

"Early next year, I believe we must come to either strongly induced savings or compulsory savings if we are to have the wide distribution of war bonds so essential to financing the war effort," said George.

The Georgia Senator declined reference to House action except in one instance. He said he thought the proposed increase in the corporate combined normal and surtax rate from 31 to 45 per cent was "wrong." He asserted he thought the committee "made a mistake" in not holding the rate to 40 per cent, unless it was prepared to grant some form of postwar corporate relief.

On the same theme, Representative Knutson (Republican) of Minnesota, served notice on the House of his intention to move to recommit the House bill on Monday, for the purpose of lowering the normal and surtax rate to 40 per cent, and increasing the proposed excess profits tax rate from 87½ to 90 per cent.

Color 'Comic' Will Present Bible Stories

A revolutionary departure in picture books for children has just been announced by M. C. Gaines, president of All-American Comics, Inc., at 225 Lafayette Street, New York. Gaines will release on August 1, through newsstands and chainstores, the first of a new series to be called "Picture Stories from the Bible," in which Old Testament tales will be presented for the first time in popular colored comic continuity form. It will be similar in format and size to all other comic magazines and will sell for 10 cents.

Gaines has been working on the new Bible series for nearly two years in consultation with leading Protestant, Catholic and Jewish educational authorities.

"It is our deep conviction that the interests of American democracy will be advanced if our young people know the Bible better. We believe—and we hope—that 'Picture Stories from the Bible' will make boys and girls want to read the Bible itself," declared Gaines in revealing his plans. "The Bible stories have never before been presented in really popular form like this. Hundreds of thousands of American boys and girls will through them get their initial introduction to the Bible in a form already familiar and popular. It is a great responsibility, of which we have been keenly aware, to insure that their first impression of the Bible shall be a worthy one. To Christian and Jew alike the Bible is the Holy Book; to be treated with reverence and handled with awe. We have not sacrificed any of the reverence due to the Bible when we have portrayed its great Old Testament stories in a simple, attractive pictorial form which children can easily understand.

"At this time, when Catholic, Protestant and Jew in our Nation are strongly united for the defense of our democracy, it seems highly fitting to spread a better knowledge of the great Book which is our common heritage and which through the past centuries has taught democracy, the importance of the individual, and social righteousness."

New York, July 17.—The timeless religious significance of a sixteenth century episode in Latin-American history will be the theme of the third N. B. C. Inter-American University of the Air broadcast on Monday at 10:30 p. m., E. W. T.

The story to be dramatized—Bartolome de Las Casas' struggle to give the Indian in the Spanish colonies his freedom—finds a parallel in the United Nations' fight for freedom today. Once more the welfare of the common man is at stake, as defined in the Atlantic Charter, signed by Roosevelt and Churchill in August, 1941.

In his era, four centuries ago, Las Casas was a champion of human liberty, fighting for the common man, when he sought to free the Indian from slavery and to deliver to him his rights as a human being. In recognizing man as the image of God, he fought for the very foundation of the democratic ideals which the nations of the new world have in common.

THE PUBLIC IS CORDIALLY INVITED

"THE NINETY AND NINE"
— — — ELIZABETH C. CLEPHANE — — —

There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold;
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold,
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

The last six lines of this great hymn were inspired by the situation of the lost sheep in the parable. And after describing the Shepherd's tireless search, the hymn reaches its climax at the great rejoicing when the lost sheep is found.

Identification Cards

For years it has been rather taken for granted that the American people would resent and resist efforts to impose a compulsory identification system upon them. For some mysterious reason it has been called undemocratic—as savoring of authoritarian methods of governments. Yet sentiment in favor of fingerprinting, photographing and otherwise identifying everybody living in the United States appears to be strong and increasing. In a recent Gallup poll 72 per cent of the voters declared that all Americans should be required to carry an identification card. Last February the affirmative vote was just 69 per cent. Of course, systems of compulsory identification can be used by tyrannical governments to hound just and law-abiding citizens as well as criminals. Indeed, they are being used for that purpose today in many countries. But the American aversion to such systems is based on instinctive fears that have no basis in reason.

The favor with which public identification cards are now viewed is due to the use that might be made of them in case of casualties from air raids and in tracing spies and saboteurs. But at all times they are a help in tracing and tracking down criminal elements, while they are extremely valuable for purposes of identification in all kinds of accidents. To the citizen who has nothing to hide and no reason to distrust the motives of his Government, it should be a source of profound satisfaction rather than disquiet to know that he can be officially identified. It is, indeed, a protection not only in case of accident but also against the kind of unlawful assaults to which unknown and friendless individuals are especially liable.

Politics In Wartime

In a democracy there can be no adjournment of politics for any length of time. Governments of the people must function through the expression of the popular will at the polls, and whenever the polls are open politics will automatically flourish. Even in time of war, therefore, we cannot reasonably expect an adjournment of politics. Under the Constitution elections must be held; so the people must be acquainted with candidates and policies, and that means that would-be public servants must make a bid for support at the polls.

What we need in a period like the present is not a moratorium on politics, but assurance that politics will not interfere with vigorous prosecution of the war. The simple fact is that we must fight the war and proceed with orderly contests between candidates for public office at the same time. That will be difficult only for those who place partisanship above their loyalty to their country. For the great majority who are Americans first and Democrats or Republicans second our struggle against the Japo-Nazi peril will be kept aloof from partisan scraps.

Now one obvious way to keep the war out of political squabbles is for those who are conducting it to remain aloof from the political arena. That is taken for granted so far as the Army and Navy are concerned. But politicians are attempting to draw the President into various political fights, and in the case of the New York gubernatorial contest they appear to have succeeded. This is most unfortunate. Mr. Roosevelt is the spearhead of our war effort. Fortunately, his own office is not open to contest in this first year of war. Hence there is no reason for him to divert his wholehearted attention or energy from the staggering task of directing the war. And there is every reason why he should bar his door to politicians seeking presidential aid in partisan causes.

As President and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, Mr. Roosevelt is the chosen leader of all the people. He needs the support of all the people in fighting this greatest of all contests in human slaughter, and he will have that support if he does not deviate from the role into which war has cast him. But he cannot step out of character to participate in partisan scraps without imperiling the national unity which we purchased at such a terrific price at Pearl Harbor. Nor can he permit the White House to be used as a sounding board of partisan appeals without danger of dragging the cause of freedom and national security into the political arena.

Congressional leaders who are debating the momentous problems of the hour have an obligation of almost equal magnitude to keep partisanship firmly in check. Most members must, of course, campaign for reelection if they hope to retain their seats. But this can be done without disrupting the sessions of Congress and without dragging partisan considerations into war legislation. Politics devoid of genuine statesmanship would be a liability to the individual as well as a source of national peril.

Wage Policy

At least it may be said of the Little Steel award of the War Labor Board that a policy on wage stabilization has at last been crystallized. The workers asked for a $1 a day increase. They get 44 cents. The basic theory for the raise is that though the cost of living has increased 15 per cent since January 1, 1941, steel wages have gone up only 11.8 per cent. The 44 cents raise will make up the difference. This theory is now elevated into a guiding principle for the settlement of future cases—the principle of preserving real wages as of January 1, 1941.

The new ruling may not seem to jibe with the President's directive on wage stabilization. But that directive was inexplicit enough to require the reinforcement of a policy. Mr. Roosevelt called for the maintenance of wages in general "at existing scales." He left it to the WLB to apply that aim, and gave the board leeway "to give due consideration to inequalities and the elimination of substandards of living. Now nobody would contend that working conditions in the steel industry are substandard. An average hourly rate of about $1 is earned in that industry, and, even with the average work week at 40.7 hours, the average annual income is $1926.72. The mandate to iron out wage inequalities is what has caused a riot of interpretations. What is an inequality? The country is riddled with them—as between regions, plants, and comparable occupations. Accordingly the War Labor Board seemed all set to undertake the task of raising wages to levels which it regarded as more just or more workable than the prevailing levels. This meant that each wage dispute was being decided upon what the WLB conceived was its individual merits. A task of enormous complexity! A halt has now been called to this process of correcting all manner of inequalities, and in future only one inequality will be ironed out. That is the lack of adjustment of present-day wages in terms of purchasing power to conditions prevailing on January 1, 1941.

This is all that we can justifiably expect the War Labor Board to do. It was expected to evolve a standard for wage stabilization. And it has done so. January 1, 1941, seems as fair a date as any to set as a yardstick, and, in fact, has served as one for our local rent board in the stabilization of local rents. That there will be a flock of wage demands on the heels of this formula, as has been predicted, may be doubted. Cost of living increases since 1941 have been made up to organized labor in most of the war industries. The problem, of course, remains of wage changes outside WLB jurisdiction, for, with Uncle Sam holding the bag, war manufacturers are not loathe to put up wages. The employers' concurring opinion calls attention to the danger of voluntary wage increases which do not subscribe to the WLB formula. It is a danger. Therefore, now that the WLB has worked out a policy, the President might well give it the force of general application.

Still, the general problem remains—and is intensified by this wage increase—of preventing an inflation from tearing through Mr. Henderson's price ceilings. More and more money is getting into the system and fewer and fewer goods are available to the spenders. Either we must mop up income for which there are no civilian goods or reconvert our war industry back into civilian industry to make the goods which will absorb the money. As yet the people do not see the dimensions of the problem because much of our spending money is going into irreplaceable stocks on hand. There can be no reconversion of industry, of course. So the only method of staving off inflation is to immobilize the spare income which our war industry is pumping into circulation. Since we cannot get the goods, we must give up the money. As the President has said, "our standard of living will have to come down," or, as we all say, only sacrifice can win this war.

Thus there can be no return to peacetime standards for our workers (or for anybody else), no matter what the WLB does to try to conserve the buying power of the pay envelope. Living standards will be reduced either by inflation or by Government policy along the lines of the seven-point program. Inflation would ruin the currency; the seven-point program would save it. The WLB award has underlined the urgency of action along the entire anti-inflation front by adding to the stream of surplus income. This is recognized in a separate concurring opinion by the chairman of the WLB, William H. Davis. But the common sacrifice, he said, should come not "in wage determinations by the War Labor Board addressed to workers alone but in taxation by Congress, where all our citizens are represented, and where taxes can be so measured that the imposed reduction of income will fall equitably upon all groups."

In this Mr. Davis is right. The President can beat inflation only by moving along all seven fronts simultaneously, but particularly along the tax front. That this has not been done with far more resolution is the fault of the Administration rather than Congress. For instance, it has balked at a sales tax. However, if this award calls irresistibly for a sales tax—as it does—the wage formula must be clarified to be workable. A sales tax would put up living costs and under the new formula this rise in living costs would put up wages. Accordingly clarification of the WLB's "guiding principle" is required to permit only the 15 per cent adjustment in wages called for by the rise in living costs between January 1, 1941, and May, 1942.

Gas Subsidies

The announcement that the RFC through a subsidiary, the Defense Supplies Corporation, will pay a subsidy to the oil industry to offset the increased cost of transporting oil to the Eastern Seaboard touched off a lively debate in the Senate on the desirability of paying subsidies to avoid price increases. Congress has authorized the OPA and the RFC to resort to subsidies under certain conditions, and both agencies have already done so on a restricted scale. It cannot be said, therefore, that Congress has refused to take a stand on the subsidy question, though it has shown a profound reluctance to provide the RFC and the OPA with additional funds for subsidy purposes.

Undoubtedly subsidization presents some extremely difficult problems of policy, and Congress cannot be expected to act hastily. However, it should be possible to formulate some general legislative rules for guidance of the administrative authorities. In the case of gas—a strategic commodity—a strong case can be made out in favor of subsidies, because the added cost of shipping oil by rail instead of by tankers is a direct result of the submarine campaign. This extra cost may fairly be regarded as a war outlay to be borne by everybody instead of by gas and oil consumers living in a restricted area. Moreover, the payment of a subsidy to the oil industry appears to be a lesser evil than the innumerable adjustments required by changes in the price of gas and oil.

The situation is quite different when it comes to paying subsidies on an extensive scale as a means of keeping prices of all sorts of commodities from rising above industrial price ceilings. Mr. Henderson maintains that thousands of small businesses essential to our economic system must be subsidized unless we are prepared to witness their wholesale extinction or else raise price ceilings over a wide area. If subsidies to hard-pressed marginal producers could be kept within reasonable bounds, and limited to reasonably efficient concerns, they would doubtless be preferable to the suggested unpleasant alternatives. But there is undoubtedly grave danger of abuse—danger that subsidies might become the approved method of holding down price ceilings.

Congress should keep sufficient control of the purse strings, therefore, to make certain that public money is not being poured out in the form of subsidies to cover up the inadequacies of the price-control system. If prices to the consumer can only be kept down by saddling the Treasury—and that means ultimately the taxpayer—with a huge load of debt incurred for payment of industrial subsidies, the social cost of controlling prices may prove to be much too high.

Arlington Buses

The Rosslyn to D. C. bus service dispute illustrates again the unwisdom of having Arlington County, integrally a part of the Nation's Capital, legally located in the State of Virginia. Should service by the Virginia buses into the center of town be discontinued, persons using public conveyances would not only have to transfer to District streetcars, but also would have to pay two extra fares daily. The purpose of the change is said to be to save gas and rubber, but the added expense of the new system might be expected to cancel out this saving. For it is likely that many of the 35,000 commuters would use their own cars rather than pay the extra fares.

FINAL THE FUMBLE

A word; a sign;
A prophecy,
For all that is
And is to be:

The start is the end
And the end the start,
Dust on the eyes,
Rust on the heart.

Take all you may
And all you will,
Have your way
And have your fill.

That's all, brother;
That's quite all,
Final the fumble,
Final the fall.

Rubber Sources

I do not know how close a high public official can get his ear to the ground—but here a few thing they should know.

Millions of people—right or wrong—have grown to believe that in spite of a national crisis, the domestic political situation is being given first consideration in solving the rubber problem—elections. Statements emanating from Washington that we are critically short of rubber are superfluous. Our people are all too aware of it. What they do not understand is the inadequate policy to stretch what we do possess to meet our national needs.

The only opposition Washington has had, even to its weak-kneed conservation policies, has come from congressional blocs, which the mass of the public believes are placing their own personal political futures ahead of the Nation's critical interest.

The public has long been prepared for sacrifices and cannot understand why policies have not been instituted that would really help correct well known shortages of material and transportation. In the absence of it, there is a growing feeling of disgust amongst thinking men and women. Among those who passively follow a feeling of—we might as well use it, so long as they hand it out to us!

Why does not the Government take over every second owned non-essential civilian automobile? Why not make every car owner under oath, state what tires and tubes, new and old he possesses, including those actually on his automobile and then requisition all but five tires and tubes. The amount of this available rubber—now in "cool storage"—will I predict be surprising. If this proves inadequate, take over every non-essential automobile. There are several million of them.

Until all this has been done, until this vast source of supply has been channeled into national requirements, for Government cannot escape full responsibility for not materially correcting the present national rubber and transportation shortage which every child in the country knows has existed ever since we were pushed out of the Pacific. Use Or Lose Them

Our gas allowance was so inadequate (we don't get 15 miles per gallon of gas) that from May 15 on for nearly four weeks we hardly moved our car.

Then when the announcement came that the coupon units were doubled, we had our full card intact. This made it possible to carry on necessary war work after hours.

We were still very careful about using gas, because perhaps the permanent gas rationing might be postponed until August or September and the units left might again be doubled.

Now it seems that July 22 is the day the new ration goes into effect. So I have the problem many people seem to have. If our present card could be honored after July 22 many persons, including myself, would be glad to use it later to help out on the three gallons, five pints per week. But Mr. Henderson has put it up to us as sporting Americans. He says, "Use it or lose it"—so it's up to us to use it, I guess.

Certainly we who saved in the beginning shouldn't be penalized for our saving.

There should be some distinguishing mark of honor for Jack Cullen, who Cullenized the German saboteurs; and e converso some mark of everlasting infamy for those cormorants who use the bribery route to obtain governmental contracts, for which they receive a King's ransom as reward for their infamies.

Politics Then and Now

In looking back over my recollections of the first World War and comparing them with the present war, a nice study in contrasts is presented. Although a stanch Republican all my life, I never thought of President Wilson as a Democrat but solely as President. He was apparently not concerned with politics during the war and did not make appointments for purely political reasons. There were no Meany appointments during his terms of office. He was not dabbling in New York State politics during the war. There was no suspicion that he was hoping to be elected for a third term, much less working toward a fourth term. He favored neither the farmers nor organized labor. He cracked down on both management and organized labor with impartiality. He did not have a group of starry eyed bright boys planning our future economic system—we were fighting to preserve our system of democracy, not some new world order of socialistic flavor, as vaguely defined in a charter promulgated by himself and Lloyd George.

The war was conducted as economically as possible in spite of relatively minor mistakes. At least there was no suspicion that money was spent just for the sake of spending. Thrifty people were not dismayed at Government waste of two billions a year upon unnecessary non-war boondoggling. Subsidies were not given the farmers to provide parity returns on their crops, and incidentally to buy their votes. Government was by the people and not by favored pressure groups. Corporations were allowed to make sufficient money at least to finance the post-war conversion to civilian manufacture. President Wilson made no effort to employ his prerogatives as commander in chief of the armed forces to direct war strategy; he left this direction to those better qualified. He did not hesitate to appoint outstanding men to office or to remove associates, even Cabinet members, who did not measure up to the war effort. He was willing to admit mistakes. There was much less regimentation and a much more ready spirit of sacrifice throughout the country. This is seen from the fact that the Nation as a whole was even willing to adopt national prohibition in order to promote the war effort. In contrast, can anyone imagine any of the New Deal Youth being willing to forego their liquors? What a contrast there is between then and now. AN OLD FOGY.

Another Front

As a frequent visitor to your lovely city, permit me to express deep gratitude for your fine, far-sighted and urgent editorial concerning the need of another front in Europe now.

Though not a military expert, nor a person who understands much of politics, but a woman who has common sense and a woman's intuition, plus the education value of editorials of opinion-forming newspapers, I wholeheartedly support your statement.

In order to save the very lives of our children, in order to preserve our beautiful cities, that stand as great monuments to our great Nation in order to save the most advanced culture and civilization the world has known, we must immediately start a battle of complete destruction, in Europe of the military robot, who, if not destroyed by us, will destroy us. Hitler's dream to conquer and invade the United States is clear to anyone who has read his book.

Arlington-Washington Bus Terminal

I read with some alarm an article on the first page of The Washington Post of July 10 in connection with a proposal for saving rubber and gasoline by stopping all Washington-Virginia-and Maryland Coach Co. buses at Rosslyn.

As a resident of Arlington County who is forced to use public conveyances in order to get to work I wish to protest strenuously against this proposal for the following reasons:

1. Those of us who work in war agency jobs have no limit to the number of hours worked. The length of time necessary getting to and from work has to be kept to a minimum in order to be of any value during the day. Your proposal will add considerably to the time consumed in commuting.

2. If a bus company can operate from Virginia to Washington at 10 cents per trip it is criminal with the increased cost of living, increased taxes etc., to expect an individual to double his cost of transportation without being given an opportunity to register his approval or disapproval.

3. Every day the Arnold operated buses pass Capital Transit buses and trolleys crowded to over-capacity with their present passengers and it is ridiculous to expect that they can absorb an estimated 35,000 persons per day without considerably increasing their number of buses and trolleys. We have been informed in the newspapers already that trolleys are to be rationed in the future and that the few that are to be delivered before July 18 will only take care of the overcrowded conditions already existing and I have further heard that the present power lines used by the Capital Transit Co. would be unable to bear this increased number of trolleys. This will therefore mean that the transit company will have to use more buses.

4. It is also highly probable that if the bus routes terminated at Rosslyn many passengers unable to spare the added time or money will get together with their neighbors in a car pool scheme of some sort and drive to work which in the ultimate will use more gasoline and more rubber than now.

5. It appears suspiciously as if this scheme has been thought up by some transit company in order to boost its own revenues at the expense of the already harassed public. It seems fair that if and when this scheme comes to a decision a committee composed of the citizens of Arlington and Fairfax Counties who use these buses should be given an opportunity to present their views. C.W. WILSON.

The Post Impressionist

Our Producing Democracy

Those who dare to challenge this country simply do not have the slightest conception of the might of the United States of America. Had they seen the richness of the soil, the strength of the industrial power of our country they would have known their attack was futile.

A united people with natural resources beyond their comprehension is the champion they have challenged.

They should have been in the back seat of my automobile as we traveled through several States that just a few years ago were drought-stricken and suffering the greatest depression in history.

They would have seen a land so immensely great in her recovery as to have startled the most cynical.

Farm machinery glistened on the farms of Maryland, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Crops were beautifully prosperous. From the smoke-stacks of the industrial cities and towns along mighty rivers and lake fronts flames of might are moulding the weapons which spell defeat for the enemies of free peoples.

A trip into the dairylands of the Northwest reveals immense defense projects in the most unexpected places. Recessed in the hinterlands are these mighty plants which seem to have mushroomed from the soil.

At one place far from the cities a project has boomed the tourist cabin business. We pulled up at a particular place and asked for a cabin for the night. A middle-aged proprietor informed us that he had only one cabin left at a price of four dollars. This was considerably higher than other cabins not far away. We said we would take it but asked if it were not unusual that there should be only one cabin available in view of the curtailment of tourist travel. He replied: "We name our price and get it in this vicinity in view of the shortage of housing for defense workers at the plant. Yes, sir, this is the greatest thing that I've seen since I gold-mined at Cripple Creek. It's like when I had to pay one dollar for a cup of coffee and five dollars for a ham sandwich."

He continued, "all the other cabins are occupied each night by the defense workers waiting for a housing project to develop. Hundreds of people are sleeping in cabins and tents down by the river."

The next morning we started early on our way and as though they had come from out of the woods, dozens of small cars filled with overalled workers streamed along the highway, entering from nearby crossroads. These workers from the hamlets and cities where they were engaged in civilian work not long ago, were on their way to the defense plant—new jobs for them. Now they're producing powder and shells to supply the fighting forces of the United Nations.

Yes, the land is powerful. For information of our enemies, this democracy is producing. Not a mile of countryside is being wasted.

This war has reached into every community in the land and the rising might of a determined people is visible everywhere.

For example, at a roadside stand where sandwiches and soft drinks are sold, the proprietor served us and then, with pardonable pride, said that he would like to have us see an invitation he had just received from his son. It was an invitation to ceremonies at which his son was to receive his wings in the United States Army Air Corps. He said, "that boy of mine is a flying fool, make no mistake about it. He'll show those Japs and Nazis a few flying maneuvers he learned while flying at the county fair. By the way, he has a further incentive. This young lady who helps in my place is his sweetheart. She just got word that her brother was lost in the Coral Sea battle."

From every corner of the country there is a united purpose evident. It is beyond the understanding of those who would enslave the world.

At a small town in Ohio we stopped at a garage for a motor checkup and the proprietor said that we were one of the last customers he was going to serve until the war is over. He had just enlisted and was going to take his place as a mechanic to keep the machines of war rolling. His place of business would be closed for the duration.

There is no complacency—make no mistake about that! You may stop at any farmhouse, at any country store, at any village gas pump and you will find that in some way every person is a part of this war effort.

We filled our gas tank in the District of Columbia and had sufficient to get us beyond the gasoline rationing area. From there it was a renewed pleasure of saying to the station attendant "Fill 'er up!"

Out in the great Northwest States invariably came the question, "Is it really so difficult to get gasoline in the East?"

On being informed that it was no exaggeration, here is what Pegler's Joe Spelvin, American, had to say about it:

"It may be tough for awhile but we'll overcome all obstacles. In the last war we were left without importations of dyestuffs. We made our own. Now we have been cut off from natural rubber supply. We'll beat that too. We'll get synthetic rubber eventually."

This was not in a tone of complacency but rather unbounded faith in the American ability to produce what it needs, in peace or in war.

From the highways and by-ways of the land the people are giving resplendent proof of united effort to win the war—each and every one doing his or her part. In the smallest towns were fenced-in supplies of scrap rubber, collected at the village gas pump.

Right up to the edge of the highways, in some States, farmers could be seen threshing and binding grain. The corn was so thick in spots you could almost reach from the window of the automobile and touch it.

The drought has passed away and now this country, endowed with natural and man-made richness is obviously united in its determination to see the fight through to Victory.

JACK BURNESS.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Point Three In Practice

IT WAS the business of the War Labor Board in the "Little Steel" case to establish a practical working rule for carrying out the third of the seven points in the President's anti-inflation program of April 27: "We must stabilize the remuneration received by individuals for their work."

LIPPMANN

IN ORDER to understand what the board has done, the crucial thing to bear in mind is that it has taken "remuneration for work" to mean the rate of pay or an hour's work. The board, quite properly, was not concerned with the total earnings of a worker, with the amount of money in his week's pay envelope. It was concerned with his "remuneration"—with the rate of pay for each hour of work. And it is this hourly rate of pay that the board has "stabilized."

In giving practical meaning to the word "stabilize," the board had to make a judgment on the broad grounds of equity. The board might have said that the hourly wage rate on April 27 should stay put unless the cost of living index rises after April 27. The board found, however, that for 16 months, from January 1, 1941, up to April 27, 1942, the cost of living had risen 15 per cent—whereas for a long period before January 1, 1941, the cost of living had been fairly stable. The board, therefore, decided that it was fairer to stabilize hourly wage rates as of the stabler period, thus allowing for the fact that the country could have, but in fact had not, prevented the cost of living from rising 15 per cent.

In view of the fact that labor had renounced the right to strike before Congress and the Administration and the country got around to stabilizing the cost of living, the justice of this ruling is evident. It is significant that the four employer members of the board agreed that this was just.

IN ESTIMATING the effects of the decision we must continue to keep clearly in mind that what the Board has stabilized is the hourly rate of pay. It has not frozen the income of the wage earners. If they work longer hours, they will have a larger income. Nor has the Board frozen the standard of living so as to guarantee to the wage earners that they will be able to consume as much of the same goods as they did in time of peace. What the Board has said is that for an hour's work the pay shall theoretically be enough to buy at Henderson's prices the same goods that hourly pay bought 18 months ago.

But this is very different from saying that the Board has ruled that the purchasing power of workers shall be maintained at the same peacetime standard of 1941. For example, if it took a worker, who was paid a dollar an hour, 12 minutes to earn enough to buy 1 gallon of 20-cent gasoline in 1941, then under the Board's ruling he must be able to earn a gallon of gasoline in 12 minutes. But that does not mean he will be able to buy as many gallons as he did in 1941. It means only that the very few gallons he is able to buy will continue to cost him 12 minutes' work per gallon. Like every one else he is subject to rationing and to taxation and perhaps later to compulsory saving.

THE FOUR labor members of the board say in their dissent that the ruling "struck a serious blow at the foundations of the collective bargaining process." That is not a fair description of the ruling. The foundations of the collective bargaining process are untouched, and if anything they have been fortified by the other parts of the decision granting maintenance of membership and the check-off, and by other provisions which recognize fully the collective bargaining process. What has happened is that there is now a rule for fixing the hourly rate of pay when employers and employes disagree because they have not reached a collective bargain.

In fact this sets an upper limit on wage rates, provided the cost of living index remains fixed. The unions have been given a clear standard of what they are entitled to ask by collective bargaining for the duration of the war. The correct description of what has happened, then, is to say that the foundations of collective bargaining are untouched but that the use of collective bargaining on wage rates has been regulated under the war power.

IN CONSIDERING their attitude towards the policy, the leaders of labor will do well to remember that the real problem which wage earners and all others will face six months hence and thereafter will be how to obtain goods and services, not money. At the board's hourly wage rates, when the substandard wages have been taken care of, the income of the great mass of war workers will greatly exceed the goods they are able to buy. Many things a man wants he won't be able to get for love or money. Many things he needs he will be able to have only in rationed quantities. The things he will be able to buy he will, we hope and believe, be able to buy at present prices.

Therefore, what could be gained by rejecting the stabilization of hourly wage rates, by incurring the popular odium of unsettling industry in time of war, by confronting the country with angry disputes about rates of pay? Suppose the labor unions used their bargaining power to drive up wage rates as high as their power could force them? What would happen? Would workers have more tires, gasoline, ice boxes, radios, sugar or any of the other things that are going to be scarce? Not all. The inevitable and certain effect would be to bring in more quickly higher taxes, more drastic rationing, severer restrictions on the choice of work. In other words this country would have to resort to much more direct forms of compulsion to keep the national economy in order for the purposes of the war.

ALMOST certainly we shall come to these war measures anyway. If the labor leaders are wise they will prepare to play their part in seeing to it that the measures are wisely set up and justly administered. That is where they can do the most to protect the real interests of their members, and they will make a mistake if they weaken themselves morally and practically by fighting a phony battle over hourly wage rates.

Japanese Morale

By Clarke Kawakami

Strong By Necessity

WHILE Japan was fighting China alone, her military achievements were far from impressive. True, the Rising Sun was planted at all strategic points along the entire China Coast, and Japanese armies thrust far into the bleak interior. But they were unable to deal anything like a knockout blow. On the contrary, Chinese guerillas kept on harassing the invaders at every turn, and by the summer of 1941, after four years of bloody, inconclusive fighting, the campaign had come to a virtual stalemate.

Thus the world was given the impression that Japan's much-touted armies were no longer to be feared. Her air power seemed negligible. Her mechanized forces appeared to fall far short of Western standards. Experts abroad confidently relegated her to second or third rank as a military power, and if China were not enough to prove it, they could point to the trouncing Japanese troops took from the Russians at Nomonhan in the late summer of 1939.

Then came the infamy of Pearl Harbor, lifting the curtain upon a Japan before which the world had to revise its estimates. Within a few brief months the Mikado's army and navy, shielded by overwhelming air power, swept like a tide over the western and southwestern Pacific, conquering the most vital Asiatic possessions of the Occidental Powers and reducing successively Hongkong, Singapore and Corregidor, the second of which had long been regarded as impregnable.

Under the impact of these events, Japanese warplanes and pilots suddenly, lose in the estimate of Western observers, and Japanese panzer forces were credited with skill, power and courage. Yet even if we make allowances for the possibility that Japan had been holding her best and newest equipment in reserve, the arms she used in the Philippines, Malaya, the Indies and Burma cannot have been so very much superior to those she had already been using in China. The same is true of officers and men. The troops that swept the British out of Singapore and finally overwhelmed the indomitable defenders of Bataan were essentially the same as those who failed to conquer China.

What, then, is the cause of the signal acceleration of the tempo of Japan's successes since she plunged into World War II and struck at the two most powerful anti-Axis nations? It cannot be explained entirely by the fact that Japanese planes, tanks and guns proved better than we thought them, or that, by striking unexpectedly and treacherously, Japan was able to crush the United Nations defenses by mere weight of numbers before adequate men and material could be massed to oppose them.

These were, perhaps, the major factors. But they do not tell the whole story. There must be some other weapon in Japan's arsenal, which we have overlooked—something that led Generals Stilwell and Doolittle to pay the Japanese a left-handed compliment by remarking, "They are not supermen." What is it?

In "War and Peace," the first of Tolstoi's famous trilogy, which this war has again restored to popularity, the sage of Yasnaya Polyana has this to say:

"Force is the product of the mass multiplied by the velocity. In war the force of the troops is also the product of the mass, but the multiplier is an unknown quantity. . . . This "X" is the spirit of the men, their greater or less eagerness to fight, to face danger; it is quite irrespective of the genius of generals, of a formation in two lines, or in three, or of the number of weapons borne by the men, whether clubs or muskets firing 30 shots a minute."

This Tolstoian theory needs perhaps to be revised in the light of such modern military inventions as the airplane and the tank. The machine is unquestionably more important now than it used to be. But Italy's war performance to date is proof that Tolstoi's main contention remains true. Nothing perhaps will ever change the fundamental principle that the real strength of an army is its morale.

While Japan was fighting China alone, the morale of her army was not high. Why? Simply because she did not take her enemy seriously enough. Any Japanese buck private, even those who had seen service at the front, would tell you that the "chankoro," as he contemptuously called the Chinese, had no stomach for fighting and that 10 of them were no match for one hardy son of Nippon. Japanese troops went over to China as though they were going on a picnic. It is not surprising that they are there yet.

ALL THIS changed, however, when Japan pitted herself against the world's richest and potentially most powerful nations, Britain and America. No Japanese on the morning after Pearl Harbor can have underestimated the strength of these new enemies. Nor could the most optimistic of the Mikado's subjects have felt that victory was by any means certain. On the contrary, the whole population—soldiers, sailors, civilians, even women and children—must have grimly realized that now Japan's very existence was at stake.

One can very well imagine how Premier General Tojo has been exploiting this sentiment. What he has been saying to the admirals and generals and, through them, to the seamen and privates probably boils down to this:

"Japan now faces the gravest test in the 26 centuries of her history. If we lose this war, we shall lose the empire our ancestors have so painstakingly built up. Korea, Manchuria, Formosa, the Pacific islands—all will be torn from us. Our very homeland will be invaded. Our people humiliated. Our enemies are frankly saying that they will crush us so that we can never rise again. Do you want to see our beloved Emperor deposed, our land ravaged and turned into so much scorched earth at the hands of vengeful enemies? That is what will happen if we lose. We must therefore win if it takes 10 summers. Our battle cry must be 'Victory or Death.'"

At the same time, Tojo and his aides must be placing before the soldiers and the nation a tempting picture of what victory, if won, will bring them. All the new material riches for which Japan has striven for a decade will be in her hands. A vast Asiatic "co-prosperity sphere," meaning a closed economic empire under Japan's leadership, will assure a market for all the goods poured out by Japanese mills and factories. For the first time Japan will become one of the rich nations of the world.

Such is the choice which the government holds before the Japanese people. What makes them fight so fiercely, then, is fear plus illusion—fear that the nation is cornered and may be wiped out if it loses, illusion that if it wins greater riches will be theirs than ever fell into the hands of all the conquistadores of yore. This, not the vague notion of "Asia for the Asiatics" which the average soldier does not understand, drives Japanese troops to fight like so many fanatical crusaders.

Fighting Inflation

By Janet R. Keith

Canadian-U. S. Interdependency

WHEN the United States followed Canada's lead in adopting an over-all price ceiling, Canadians were rather flattered. It is gratifying to a small country to have a large neighbor copy her economic styles. Mingled with this pride was a vast sense of relief. Canada had staked everything on a desperate gamble, and she seemed to have won the first round. When she adopted her price ceiling last fall she took two big risks; first, that the scheme would prove workable in Canada; second, that before long the United States would adopt a similar plan.

It was a bold venture. Canada, the first democratic country in the world to impose such a sweeping system of economic control, whistled to keep up her courage. She knew in her heart that the job was too big for her to do alone. The United States is Canada's biggest customer and biggest supplier. (Last year's trade amounted to 1800 million dollars.) Had the U. S. continued to climb up the path to inflation, Canada's ceiling would soon have come crashing down.

NOW that price ceilings and anti-inflation programs have gone into effect in both countries, there is a much better hope that living costs can be held down. Price levels in the two countries are not far out of line; the cost of living index in Canada is about 15 points. The whole continent is girding itself for a battle against inflation, and seems to have a fair chance of winning. But although Canada and the U. S. are now living under similar ceilings, there are still difficulties to be ironed out.

Imports from the United States to Canada still present a problem. During the period when Canada had a retail price ceiling and the United States hadn't, Canadian importers found that the cost of goods imported from the States was steadily rising. They were forced to do one of two things; stop importing, or get a government subsidy which would enable them to sell under the ceiling. Many nonessentials were dropped from the list, but imported essentials added up to a sizable subsidy bill for the Canadian government. In spite of the fact that the United States now has a ceiling, there is still a spread on the price of many commodities. It is difficult to see how this spread could be eliminated, because Canada would puncture her own ceiling if she brought prices up to the U. S. level.

So Canada will still have to go on paying subsidies on certain goods from the United States. When the bill gets too big, she will have to make a list of "goods no longer eligible for government subsidy," as she did on May 11. This will affect the export trade of some sections of the United States, and might have political repercussions.

The import problem is complicated by the difference in exchange, which still adds 10 per cent to the cost of goods bought by Canada. Apparently Canada's shortage of United States dollars is still critical. Unable to convert her sterling balances in London into United States dollars or to receive gold shipments from other countries, Canada last year had an adverse balance in her trade with United States of 143 million dollars.

There are serious difficulties in the way of improving Canada's position. She has always refused to accept goods from the United States on a lend-lease basis. Increased gold production is a possibility, but there is a growing shortage in supply of men and materials available for gold mining. And public sentiment is beginning to turn against accelerated gold mining in wartime; from a practical viewpoint it just doesn't make sense. Wholesale repatriation of securities held by Canadians in the United States would only depress the markets and deprive Canada of a source of foreign exchange through interest and dividends. Tourist trade, hitherto a valuable source of United States dollars, is fading into the mists of gas and tire rationing.

There has been much talk of dollar parity in connection with Canada's joining the Munitions Assignment Board. But so far there has been no concrete action. Unless some more workable scheme replaces the present one, Canadian imports from the States will have a rough time of it in spite of the United States ceiling.

AN INCREASE of Canadian exports to the United States would help the exchange situation. But Canada cannot afford labor or materials for a large increase in export industries. Moreover, there is such a thing as exporting too much; as Canadian housewives have discovered lately. Cattlemen can get a much better price for beef on the United States market than they can under the Canadian ceiling. Consequently they have been exporting as much as the quota allows, and storing great quantities in the hope of exporting later on. Canadian women have found many butcher stores so short of meat that it looked like Friday every day.

This problem of beef export has been a headache for the government. Spokesmen for agriculture contend that the farmer should be allowed to sell in the highest market; price ceiling officials say that steaks must stay under the ceiling and Canadians must have meat. A subsidy plan is being worked out, but there is as yet no satisfactory solution.

In spite of these difficulties, the price ceiling which now covers the continent means that Canada and the United States are in this anti-inflation fight together. If the ceiling is punctured in one country, it means serious trouble for the other. Similarly with all the controls which must support the ceiling: wage stabilization, taxation, control of supply, rationing. If wages get out of hand in the United States, that's bad news for Canada. If Canada's tax program manages to drain off excessive spending power, that's good news for the United States. Canada's economic fate is wedded to the fate of the United States, for better or for worse.

Fair Enough

New Deal Unionism

GEORGE SPELVIN, American, has been laid off his job, what with priorities and all, so he has been looking around for something in the war industries, but with unsatisfactory results. He read quite a long time back where Mrs. R. said she thought everyone should be ordered what to do by the Government, and he has been reading also where Paul McNutt says this and Paul McNutt says that about how people have got to fit themselves into the effort or else. Mr. Spelvin doesn't need to be ordered to help, although he would appreciate a little help in finding a spot where he could make himself useful, but up to now he hasn't been able to make a deal. Not that they can't use him. They can use him all right, for in his time he has done a little of just about everything. He is a not half bad hammer and saw carpenter, he can drive a truck, he knows a little about plumbing and wiring and cement work and he is a pretty good sort of a, you know, handy man. And he has had quite a little factory experience, too.

Well, so he has been scouting around for a job, but every place he goes some guy tells him, well has he got a union card and old George says well he used to have one years ago in his old home town and they always tell him that doesn't do no good. He has got to join a new union and some of them want up to $300 and some want a racket of $2 a day for a permit and some don't want so much, but they are so bossy that he just says bi-God nobody is going to make him join anything whether it is the Elks or the Moose or the mice or the muskrats or whatever. It is the principle of the thing with George and, moreover, being a native American and a veteran of the last war, he has a rather harrow prejudice about being ordered around by guys who talk like they just got off the boat. A lot of Americans are narrow-minded like that.

ONE PLACE George went the company wouldn't even see him at all without he had an okay from the union, so he went down to the union joint and hung around half the day until the head guy came in and by that time there was about 50 guys waiting. Some of the guys they crowded up to the head guy and asked could they speak to him confidentially and after they spoke to him they went right out, apparently well pleased and Spelvin got an idea from the way they acted that they had slipped the head guy something like maybe a tip on the fourth race or maybe a good telephone number. At last the guy got around to Spelvin and told him it would cost him $75 to join, but he could pay it 10 bucks down and the rest $2 a day until he was paid off, and George says: "What the hell for do I pay you 75 bucks when I have got my ever-loving to support and what do you figure to do for me for the 75 bucks? I would rather buy war bonds."

"Why," the guy says, "We got these high wages for the boys" and George says: "Well that is a hot one because the wages are all established by Government contract and furthermore how do I know what you are going to do with the dough?"

"Why," the guy says, "We have to pay salaries and administration expenses and rent and all and then you have got to remember that the New Deal is labor's friend so we are going to spend a lot of it on the elections to beat the Quislings and Fifth Columnists and all the lousy traitors who are obstructing the war effort by playing politics."

"But," says old George, "I am a Republican and I want work to help lick the dirty Germans and the Japs because I am an American, but I think the New Deal smells bad and you aren't going to give any of my dough to their campaign fund."

"Have it your way," the guy says, "but no dough no card and no card no job and I might as well warn you, my friend, our beloved country is getting pretty short of labor and if you don't get into some kind of a war job voluntarily why you are likely to be drafted into some job for a slacker."

"IF THEY want to draft me for a war job do I still have to join the union and pay you mugs my dough to help elect some more New Deal?" George asked.

"Well, the New Deal is the workingman's friend," the guy said, "and strictly against scabs in every shape or form so I don't think they will give up labor's gains by letting a lot of disrupters get jobs alongside of loyal, patriotic union men without doing their bit to uphold the President."

Well, that is the way it goes everywhere and nothing but arguments and George Spelvin, American, still wants to work for the war, but they can throw him in the can for life before he will shower down, but the union guys keep calling him a lousy traitor or Fifth Columnist and they say when he gets drafted for a job they will give him the dirtiest kind of work at the lowest pay and they will not leave him join the union, but they will just hold back a certain amount of his pay so the union can slip it to the New Deal and preserve the unity of our beloved country and the precious heritage of democracy.

Colombia Cooperates

By Virginia Prewett

Lopez States His Country's Intention

NO LATIN-AMERICAN leader has more plainly stated his country's intention to work with the United States than did President-elect Alfonso Lopez of Colombia last week in speaking to the governing board of the Pan American Union. Representative government in Colombia is a working reality and her President-elect, when he forecasts the policies of his administration, reveals the will of the majority of the Colombian people. His speech last Friday in effect notified the world in general and the diplomatic representatives of the 21 New World republics in particular that old scores between the United States and Colombia have been settled and that the Colombian people are genuinely disposed to be our friends. It marks a milestone in inter-American relations, since it shows the concrete results of a system of cooperation that is being used to settle old difficulties with other Latin-American nations and to build a very necessary present and future security for this hemisphere.

Few countries have felt more keenly the clash of their national interests with our own than Colombia did when Panama revolted and we guaranteed its independence in the treaty that gave us the right to build the Canal. From 1903 till 1909, when efforts to settle the question were begun in earnest, Colombia's outspoken leaders and her free and vigorous press did not mince words when they expressed their opinion of us. In 1914, the Thomson-Urrutia Treaty, in which we express regret over the Panama incident and agreed to pay a 25-million-dollar indemnity, was negotiated. Though the first proviso was cut out when it was finally ratified in 1921, it is agreed that the indemnity did much to salve Colombian pride. It also gave her government funds for a number of much-needed national improvements.

This global settlement allowed resentment to cool, but Colombians consistently emphasize that it was President Roosevelt's announcement of the Good Neighbor policy and Secretary Hull's inauguration of it at the Montevideo Conference in 1933 that first opened their minds to the idea that their country could work with ours. From 1933 on, two main implementations of the new policy took shape. First was the negotiation of a trade treaty, one of the first of the Hull program. Second, we proved to the Colombians' satisfaction that when difficulties arose between them and American commercial interests operating in Colombia, our Government would go no farther than trying to obtain a fair conciliation of interests through arbitration. This banished the old Latin American fear of the Big Stick, which Colombia had felt with force.

As this new United States policy became more real to them Colombia's liberal and progressive leadership began to contribute to the growing rapprochement. During his first term as president, from 1934 till 1938, Alfonso Lopez introduced into Colombia a number of social reforms along the lines of those being put into effect here. His successor, Eduardo Santos, who was confronted with considerable pressure from small German and Spanish-inspired groups who wanted to swing Colombia into the Axis' orbit, steadily and skillfully guided the country toward full cooperation in the plans for hemisphere security that the American republics were working out at Lima, Panama and Havana. When the showdown came at Rio in January, Dr. Gabriel Turbay, present ambassador to Washington, played a brilliant role in combating Argentine-Chilean intransigence on the question of breaking relations with the Axis.

The Colombian government has taken every step that the American nations have judged necessary for their protection. They have defense materials and lend-lease arrangements with us and are putting into effect measures to curb German and Japanese threats to their own internal stability and to the canal. But investigation on the ground reveals that they are going beyond this to foment consciously a genuine friendship for the United States, one based on a greater knowledge and increased comprehension of our country. This friendly current you begin to feel even before you get to Colombia. One notable influence are the editorials that Enrique Santos, brother of President Santos, writes in their jointly owned newspaper, El Tiempo, Colombia's leading daily. These articles are reprinted in Venezuela, Ecuador, Lima, Bolivia and even in Argentina and Chile.

PERHAPS the most outstanding evidence of the spontaneous interest in our life and our culture is the Colombian National Library's new program to translate and publish cheap editions of American classics. This entirely Colombian project is going forward under the direction of Enrique Uribe White, director of the library, who is himself making first translations. The books are printed and manufactured in the library, which is one of the two best in Latin America.

Colombia has also a very modern system of traveling libraries that go out into the rural districts of the nation. They use new techniques of adult education, employing films and phonograph records. They are today showing documentary films on American life. While in Colombia this spring I saw one that emphasized the excellence of our military airplanes.

The daily program of Colombia's national radio network includes lessons in English. One of Colombia's and South America's first writers, German Arciniegas, is minister of education and has been active in fostering these developments. A Colombian writer of equal achievements, Jorge Zalamea, is writing a history of American literature in Spanish.

All this means permanence and growth for friendly ties between this country and Colombia. We have a vigorous cultural relations program under way to oil the machinery of cultural exchange with Latin-American countries. Colombia has her own active cultural relations program that is reaching out with appreciable effect to her Spanish-speaking neighbors. Her people's increasingly friendly attitude toward us, carrying over into this program, will be an additional factor to strengthen the whole structure of closer inter-American relations.

The Gallup Poll

Unified Command of Land, Sea and Air Forces Finds Substantial Public Support; Poll Shows

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

"Should the Presidents, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the country, name a military leader to direct both the Army and Navy?"

Princeton, N. J., July 17.—A representative group of citizens in Alaska has asked President Roosevelt to set up a unified command of the land, sea and air forces in the Alaskan theater of war.

In the United States proper there has likewise been agitation for a unified command of all American forces, ever since the disaster at Pearl Harbor which some observers blamed on lack of coordination between the Army and Navy.

While the issue is one for experts alone to decide, nevertheless it is noteworthy that there has been a substantial rise in public sentiment for unification of command.

Two months ago as many voters opposed it as favored it, but today nearly half of all voters interviewed by the institute, and a clear majority of those with opinions, urge the adoption of the idea.

The trend has been measured on this poll question:

Results follow:

	Today	May
Favor United Command	48%	41%
Opposed	36	41
Undecided	16	18

Some military commentators have gone so far as to urge a unified command of all the forces of the United Nations, similar to the post held by Marshal Foch in the closing months of the last World War.

The typical citizen opposed to a single command for American forces believes the task is "too complicated" for any one man to handle, that it is unsafe to put so much responsibility on one man's judgment, and that this is the age of specialization in warfare as in other things.

But those in favor of the unified command declare that efficient coordination is essential, and that one central authority is the only way to remove friction between the Army and Navy and traditional jealousies among the officers.

Voters Kind to 'Ins' So Far, Capitol Notes With Relief

By D. Harold Oliver

Associated Press Staff Writer

Congressmen are beginning to note with relief that this year's primaries so far have been kind to the "ins."

In the 13 States which have voted, candidates have been chosen for nearly one-fourth of the 34 Senatorial and more than a quarter of the 435 House seats to be filled this fall. Only one Senate and 10 House incumbents have been defeated. Fears of some lawmakers that wartime elections would give the "outs" an edge appear to have been misplaced.

The ratio of one defeat out of eight Senators running for renomination and 10 setbacks for incumbents in 124 House races is about average for off-year campaigns.

The remaining primaries and State conventions may change this ratio somewhat, but sitting members are resting easier these days. The "ins" still can get a trouncing in November, many of them realize. But that is far away when measured in time of a world at war, and battlefront developments may make up the minds of many a voter.

Trend Still Lacking

The elections to date have failed to disclose any trend to gauge the November results. Although pre-Pearl Harbor voting records may have figured more or less in a few contests, the majority have been decided on local and other issues.

William J. Bulow (Democrat) of South Dakota, is the only Senator so far to lose out in the primaries. Four other Democrats—Josiah W. Bailey, North Carolina; John H. Bankhead, Alabama; Clyde L. Herring, Iowa, and Josh Lee, Oklahoma, have won Senatorial renominations, as have three Republicans—Charles L. McNary, Oregon, Senate Minority leader; C. Wayland Brooks, Illinois, and Wallace H. White, jr., Maine.

Six Democrats and four Republicans have failed of renomination for the House. The six Democrats are Leo Kocialkowski, Illinois; Luther Patrick, Alabama; William T. Schulte, Indiana; Charles I. Faddis and Guy L. Moser, Pennsylvania, and Wilburn Cartwright, Oklahoma. The four Republicans: George A. Paddock, Illinois; Benjamin Jarrett, Pennsylvania; Charles R. Robertson, North Dakota and James C. Oliver, Maine.

Three Primaries This Month

Three more primaries are to be held this month involving as many Senate seats, but one incumbent, Senator Lloyd Spencer (Democrat) of Arkansas, is barred by State law from running to succeed himself in Arkansas' initial primary July 28, because he holds office by appointment. Two House members, David D. Terry, dean of the State delegation, and Clyde T. Ellis, a public power advocate, are among the candidates for the Senatorial nomination. A run-off primary is held in that State August 11.

The Montana primary July 21 and that in Texas July 25 are attracting more than normal attention in political circles as Senators from those States have what their friends describe as lively opposition.

Senator James E. Murray (Democrat) of Montana is opposed for renomination by former Representative Joseph P. Monaghan, who ran a close race against the Senator in the 1936 primary.

Senator W. Lee O'Daniel, freshman Democrat from Texas, who resigned the governorship to win a special Senatorial election June 28, 1941, is in a three-way race for renomination with two other former Governors—James V. Allred, who resigned a Federal judgeship to run, and Dan Moody.

Archivist Sees Value Of War's Records

As a means of helping Government officials of the future, Dr. Edward G. Campbell of the National Archives staff yesterday urged Government records officers and administrators to classify, evaluate and store their records now.

Data on the first World War which is now proving valuable indicates, Dr. Campbell said, the potential value in war and peace of adequate records of the operations of Federal Government agencies.

In a paper entitled "Old Records in a New War," released jointly by the National Archives and the Society of American Archivists, Dr. Campbell pointed out that Government officials concerned with the war effort have turned to the old records compiled by their predecessors in the first World War and derived tremendous help from them.

Ambassador, Mme. Martins Return From Homeland

Despite Heat Many Returning To the Capital From Resorts

By Carolyn Bell

Just back from Rio where they have experienced the severest winter of 25 years are the Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins who, when they arrived in the blistering heat of Union Station early this morning, must have wished for a bit of that snow that has been falling on Brazil for the first time in nearly a generation.

Strange as it may seem people are suddenly flocking back to the "world capital" and in droves—despite the terrific heat. It was not so many years ago that Washington was a deserted village following May 30, but now those who have done any vacationing seem to have disposed of it early and returned to their grandstand seat for the "big show."

Martins Renewing Old Friendships

For the past few months Maria Martins has been enjoying the gayety of Rio, having been on one of the few trips to her homeland since the arrival of the Ambassador and his vivacious wife away back in March, 1939. Several weeks after Mme. Martins flew to Brazil the Ambassador followed her and they have been busy renewing old friendships and making new ones. Leaving with Mme. Martins was Mrs. Nathan Wyeth who returned to the Capital about two weeks ago. Ambassador and Mme. Martins left Rio on July 15, arriving in Miami on Thursday evening where they entrained for the Capital.

Senora de Cardenas, wife of the Spanish Ambassador, never manages to stay in one place very long. For the past week or so the blond, Rumanian-born diplomatic hostess has been in Massachusetts. There she is visiting former Gov. Cameron Forbes who has a large home there. However, heat or no heat, Senora de Cardenas is planning to return to the Capital the end of the month.

Due back at his desk next Tuesday is the Secretary of Agriculture, Claude Wickard. For the past three weeks the Cabinet member and his wife have been in Mexico, combining business with a bit of pleasure. The Secretary was in Mexico to attend the international Agricultural Conference. En route they stopped at Texas A. and M. College where Mr. Wickard made a speech. Before returning to the Capital, however, Mrs. Wickard will go to Indiana where she will visit the farm and no doubt help daughter Betty complete plans for her wedding to Ensign H. R. Bryant that is scheduled to take place in the fall.

Mrs. Pepper Returns Soon

Coming back to the Capital after an absence of a week or so is Mrs. Claude Pepper, who left for Florida sometime ago. The wife of Senator Pepper is expected here sometime over the weekend. She has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Webster, in St. Petersburg. She went on further south into Miami where she was the guest of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Moshier.

After a trip to Shreveport, La., Mrs. Oscar Chapman, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, has returned to her apartment at the Kennedy-Warren. While in Shreveport, Mrs. Chapman was the guest of her parents, the Rev. and Mrs. James I. Kendrick. Mr. Chapman, incidentally, has finally convinced friends that he is not going to run for Senator in Colorado.

Mrs. Harry Sunley Foster of Jenkintown, Pa., announces the engagement of her daughter, Jane Alice Foster, to the Rev. Francis Bayard Rhein of Montross, Va., formerly of Philadelphia, son of Mrs. John H. W. Rhein of Sounderstown, R. I., and the late Dr. John H. W. Rhein, formerly of Philadelphia.

Miss Foster was recently graduated from Briarcliff Junior College.

Mrs. Olmstead Gives Luncheon At Shoreham

Mrs. Dawson Olmstead, wife of the chief signal officer, Maj. Gen. Olmstead, was hostess at luncheon yesterday in the Louis Seize room of the Shoreham.

Sturdevant, Mrs. Basil Edwards, Mrs. S. H. Sherrill, Mrs. James T. Watson, Mrs. Kirke Lawton, Mrs. Jerry Matyka, Mrs. David Washburn, Mrs. George Bock, Mrs. William H. Murphy, Mrs. Alfred M. Shearer, Mrs. Eugene V. Elder, Mrs. Richard B. Moran, Mrs. R. C. Hildreth, Mrs. Carter Clarke, Mrs. Charles L. Olin, Mrs. Stewart Beckley and Mrs. Dana MacBride.

Also Mrs. Cedric Lewis, Mrs. Edward F. French, Mrs. F. C. Meade, Mrs. Raymond C. Maude, Mrs. Conrad E. Snow, Mrs. Emil Lenzner, Mrs. Rex. Minckler, Mrs. Tom Rives, Mrs. H. L. P. King, Mrs. Stewart Bevins, Mrs. W. W. Jervey, Mrs. Wesley T. Guest, Mrs. George Perkins, Mrs. George Pollock Bush, Mrs. Frank W. Bullock, Mrs. Fred Miller, Mrs. Charles Simpson, Mrs. Victor Conrad, Mrs. Jay D. B. Lattin, Mrs. Charles Beecher, Mrs. Arthur J. Wehr and Mrs. James D. O'Connell.

Mrs. Olmstead had her guests sit at a U-shaped table decorated with long bowls of white and yellow gladioli and fern.

Mrs. Izac Gets Cap—Is Now A Nurses' Aide

In a ceremony at Emergency Hospital, Mrs. Ed V. Izac received her nurses' aide cap yesterday morning and is now a full fledged member of the corps.

The wife of Representative Izac is looking forward to serving a regular five hours a day three days a week now that she has completed the course. Although she was eligible for her cap several weeks ago Mrs. Izac was in California with her husband at that time.

Taking part in yesterday's ceremony which was in one of the wards where the student nurses' aides do their work, was Mrs. Miles Brewster, captain of nurses, and Mrs. Andrew Stuart, supervisor of the nurses' aides.

Mrs. Cordell Hull Hostess at Tea

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, received several foreign envoys yesterday afternoon in her Wardman Park apartment.

The new Australian Minister, Sir Owen Dixon, and Lady Dixon came in for tea, as did the Indian Agent General, Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai and Lady Bajpai.

Mrs. Hull has recently returned from a sojourn in Atlantic City. She plans to remain in the Capital the rest of the summer, though she is hoping that she and her husband can get away for a few days before the torrid season is over.

Harris & Ewing

The town's still talking about the successful opening of the Red Cross canteen in Red Cross gardens a few days ago. Every mid-day since then, the workers who started the project then have been on hand to see that all customers had service-with-a-smile and plenty to eat besides. Above (left), Mrs. Carrere Barbour, co-chairman of the canteen, serves Lieut. Dean Cutshall and Capt. Alex Mallonee. Above (right), Mrs. Clayton DuBosque, co-chairman, discusses future plans with Mrs. J. D. Waters and Mrs. Sherman Trowbridge, the latter of whom is overall chairman of the canteen. Several hundred Red Cross workers, general war workers, and any service men who may happen to drop in have been served at the canteen each day since the opening. Come cold weather, the project will move indoors; but plans are being made to continue it for the duration.

Several Parties Planned for Miss Betty Jensen

With her marriage to take place a week from today, Miss Betty Jensen, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Ben Franklin Jensen, is being feted widely.

Miss Eileen Burdick entertained at a dinner-dance last evening at the Shoreham Hotel in honor of Miss Jensen and her fiance, Lieut. Donald Fitzpatrick of Brookline, Mass., and this afternoon Miss Mary Benton Gore, who will be the maid of honor, will be hostess at a shower-cocktail party in honor of the bride-to-be. This evening Miss Achsah Dorsey will entertain at a small dinner in her honor and next week a number of parties are being planned.

Miss Jensen has completed the plans for her wedding which will take place at 4 o'clock next Saturday in the sacristy of St. Matthew's Cathedral. Miss Gore will be the only attendant and Paul W. Fitzpatrick will serve as best man. The Rev. P. N. McDermott, a long-time friend of Representative Jensen, will come from Atlantic, Iowa, to perform the ceremony. He is a former national chaplain of the American Legion and is at present chaplain of the Rainbow Group.

Miss Gore's party will take place at the Sulgrave Club this afternoon, where a number of the prospective bride's friends have been asked to drop in. Miss Dorsey has asked her guests to the Army-Navy Town Club roof for cocktails and dinner and will take them on afterward to the Army-Navy Country Club for dancing. In the group will be Lieutenant Fitzpatrick. Miss Gore, Lieut. Robert McGuire, Miss Aileen Harris and Maj. Gordon Sheen.

Ensign C. P. Hurd To Wed Miss O'Neal

Of interest in Washington is the announcement that has been made by Mr. and Mrs. Warwick C. O'Neal of New York of the engagement of their daughter, Jeanne Richards O'Neal, to Ensign Charles Platten Hurd, U. S. Coast Guard Reserve, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hurd, of that city.

The bride-elect is the granddaughter of the late Judge and Mrs. Lewis L. O'Neal of Washington and the late Dr. and Mrs. Henry Richards of the Belgian Congo.

Va., have as house guests the latter's sister, Mrs. Robert Neal Dickman of St. Augustine, Fla., and Mrs. Benjamin K. Rachford of Cincinnati.

Robeys to Celebrate Silver Wedding

Dr. and Mrs. Frank A. Robey will celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary this evening with a buffet supper and dance at the Kenwood Country Club.

Dr. and Mrs. Robey were married in Washington, where Mrs. Dennis Michael McDonough was the honor attendant and George Robey served as best man. Both will be present at the party this evening. The Robeys have two children, Ensign Frank A. Robey, jr., and Miss Mary Elizabeth Robey. About a hundred guests are expected.

Dorothy Carr Sets July Date

Making final plans for her wedding to Albert Dehr, Miss Dorothy Carr has selected July 26 as the day of the ceremony.

The wedding will take place at 4 o'clock at the Calvary Baptist Church with the Rev. D. L. Carr, a brother of the bride-elect, officiating. Rev. Mr. Carr will come to Washington from Philadelphia, where he is attending the Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary at Overbrook. Following the ceremony a reception will be held at the home of Comdr. and Mrs. George L. Russell in Falls Church, Va. Commander Russell will give Miss Carr in marriage.

Both Miss Carr and her fiance attended the San Francisco State College and will make their home in San Francisco, where the prospective bridegroom is connected with the California Highway Commission. Miss Carr is treasurer and publicity chairman for the Washington Chapter of Women Fliers of America, Inc.

Bride-Elect Betty Lee Off to Philadelphia for Round of Fetes

Though honored on every side in Washington, Miss Elizabeth Lee, whose marriage to Lieut. David Scull will take place in San Antonio, Tex., August 1, will leave this morning for Philadelphia where she will be the honor guest at a round of parties.

Miss Lee, who is the daughter of Lieut. Col. E. Brooke Lee, will be accompanied to Philadelphia by her mother, Mrs. Clarence Aspinwall, where they will spend the weekend with Lieut. Scull's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Scull, in their home in Chestnut Hill.

This afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. Scull will fete their daughter-in-law-elect at a tea and this evening they will give a dinner in her honor. Tomorrow, Miss Lee's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. P. Blair Lee, will honor her at a luncheon in their Chestnut Hill home. At this party will be Senator Blair Lee, her grandfather, who is visiting with her Sunday hosts.

Returning to the Capital Sunday evening with her mother, Miss Lee, who made her debut here last October, will get ready for a whirl of Washington parties, which will include the buffet-supper at which Miss Carol Franklin will entertain Friday evening.

The prospective bride will leave for San Antonio with Mr. and Mrs. Aspinwall July 27. Her wedding in St. Mark's Church there will be a quiet one with Mr. Aspinwall giving his stepdaughter in marriage and the Rev. Edward Jones, formerly connected with the National Cathedral, officiating.

Mr., Mrs. Langmuir To Make Home In Washington

Another bride who will come to Washington soon will be Mrs. David Bulkeley Langmuir, who before her marriage on Thursday in Englewood, N. J., was Miss Marianna Lawrence, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Augustine Hicks Lawrence. The bridegroom, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Herbert Langmuir of Englewood and New York, is connected with the Office of Scientific Research and Development here.

Their wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents in Englewood, with the Rev. Arthur M. Hughes of the West Side Presbyterian Church officiating.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a wedding gown of ivory satin, trimmed with rose point lace that had been worn by her grandmother and her mother. Her heirloom veil was draped from a coronet of rose point lace and she carried an ostrich plume fan that has been in her family for generations.

Miss Ethel Lawrence, sister of the bride, and a sister-in-law, Mrs. A. Hicks Lawrence, jr., of Morris, Ill., were maid and matron of honor.

The bride was graduated from Dwight School and from Vassar College in the class of '39. She is a member of the Englewood Junior League. Mr. Langmuir received his degree from Yale University in '31 and his Ph. D. in physics in 1935 from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The Renchards asked in a group of his friends for cocktails on Thursday to their home on Whitehaven Street. Mr. and Mrs. Renchard will be off to Rehoboth for a two-week stay the first of August.

The bride, who wore a wedding dress of mousseline de soie, was given in marriage by her uncle, William Thomas Homewood of Wilmington, Del. Her flowers were of orchids and bouvardia.

Miss Barbara Fries, her maid of honor, wore a pale blue frock and carried a bouquet of small pink rosebuds. William Boyd Tyler was best man for his son and ushering were Wade Talton and Reid Baldridge.

The bridegroom has enlisted in the United States Army Air Corps and the young couple will make their home in Rocky Mount, N. C., until he is called for duty. Both attended Duke University.

Four Generals Among Guests At Recent Fete

Four generals of the United States Marine Corps were honor guests at the informal afternoon fete given a few days ago by Mrs. Rollwage Collier at her apartment in Ashmeade Place. Maj. Gen. Barney Vogel, commanding officer at Camp Elliot in San Diego, Calif., headed the list that included Maj. Gen. Ross Rowell, Brig. Gen. Joseph Fegan and Brig. Gen. Roy Geiger.

Recently returned from battle points on the scattered Pacific fronts, the Marine Corps officers are in town for only a few days leave and will be off this weekend for San Diego before being dispatched on another of those assignments to "destination unannounced" that are the order of the day in the armed forces.

Could Apartment Be Harmoniously Shared by Three Girls of Different Background? One Is a Divorcee; Another Is Rich and Spoiled; Third Was a Teacher

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Should I take an apartment with two girls, both of whom are quite different from me? I am 25 years of age, from a large family. Before taking a Government job here, I taught school for three years after working my way through a State university. I am in love and engaged to be married to a man who is now overseas in the armed service. I go out socially over the weekends, but during the week I spend the evenings reading and listening to the radio, and am in bed by 10:30 p. m. Both the other girls hate to stay home a single evening.

One girl is 22 years of age, from an extremely nice and wealthy family. She has had two years of college and a course in business training. She holds a Government job. She is an only child, and has been petted and spoiled. She seldom bathes and buys only clothes that can be worn indefinitely without showing visible signs of soil. She is too lazy to fetch and carry from laundry or dry cleaner! But because she has loads of clothes (most of them inexpensive, as she likes to save money) she does a good job of concealing the fact that she is not actually clean.

She has a sense of humor, which I appreciate,—except that it is often expressed at the wrong time. She has never been in love and has never known even a small sorrow; and does not sympathize with anyone who has. She and I have roomed together for three months and we have got along well, as a result of my paying no attention to her whims, and doing all the work of keeping the room tidy,—with no offer of help from her since the second day she moved in.

The other girl has been married and divorced. She is 23 years of age, a high school graduate, uses excellent English, and loves good music as well as "swing." In appearance, she is a striking beauty; and has many lovely clothes as well as many boy friends. She has a sweet disposition, except for brief flares of temper; and I know she would be willing to do her share of housework.

My roommate can be sweet, and at times she is sweet to me; but in general she thinks only of herself. She follows my every footstep and asks me what to do before undertaking anything. I believe if I were to leave her, it would be the biggest blow she has ever known. But I cannot reason with her and ask her to do her part; because later she would forget, or pretend to. The landlady tells me that she keeps her only because she is my friend; and she wonders why I put up with her. The main reason "why" is because I know relatives of hers; who are special friends of mine.

Do you think we three girls could live together and be happy? Having been thrown together here, we have grown fond of each other, after a fashion. Could I break away from my roommate, without hurting her feelings too much? And make her relatives understand my reason, without stating the truth too harshly?—as they think me is a dear. Am I justified in giving the matter so much thought? Or am I being too particular in choosing my friends?

GOVERNMENT GIRL.

Several 'Ifs' and 'Buts' To Be Considered

DEAR G. G.: It seems to me that an apartment shared by three girls would be preferable to a room shared by two. It is conceivable that an apartment shared by three would make possible a more systematic—and better policed—allocation of "private rights" than a room shared by two could ever afford. In the matter of dealing with a recalcitrant or irresponsible partner, certainly two heads in agreement on a grievance could bring more effective pressure to bear than one which lacks corroborative testimony. Supposing you three do take an apartment together—if you and the divorcee forthwith assume a third share each of housekeeping duties, the spoiled daughter of wealth will find herself conspicuously "on the spot," with no alibis acceptable, if she neglects her portion. She must voluntarily do her part or be distinctly persona non grata in the household.

However, conceding the possibility that the labor angle of the situation may automatically solve itself, still that doesn't guarantee smooth sailing otherwise, by any means. There is, for instance, your pardonable preference for a consistently early retiring hour,—in decided contrast to the other two girls' unsettled enthusiasm for continuous "night life." This aspect of the triple personality-combine prompts the thought that whereas you and the divorcee might in the beginning fancy yourselves kindred spirits, particularly with reference to your responsible attitude toward household matters (and both the necessity of disciplining the lazy post-debutante), the time might come when they two found ground in common, in confidentially deploring your disconcerting social aloofness. In that eventuality, you would have the "makings" of indefinable estrangement all around,—with the divorcee perhaps caught in the unenviable role of seeming to be trying to "carry water on both shoulders."

But this speculation may amount to borrowing trouble. On the favorable side of the picture is the fact that each of you appears to belong to the "gentlewoman" classification of female—and thus could reasonably be expected to steer clear of personality conflicts, by graciously refraining from sly gossip and behind-the-hand criticism directed at the absentee third. It is also in your favor that each girl has a sufficiency of independently achieved "heart interests" and social alliances. This makes for psychological health in the household—since the girl whose time and thought are pretty well taken up by her own pleasurable pursuits isn't much given to splitting hairs about her friends' (or housemates') idiosyncracies.

I don't pretend to know whether you three could,—or could not,—live harmoniously together. My contribution to your decision must rest with suggesting certain major "ifs" and "buts,"—pro and con,—to be considered in weighing the plan. As to whether you are "justified in giving the matter so much thought,"—I daresay you are. You know, from experience with both girls, that considerable risk is involved; else you would not be surveying the prospect so anxiously. This is not a case of "being too particular in choosing one's friends." It is a case of being none too comfortable where you are; and of wondering whether the projected move would be "out of the frying pan and into the fire."

Could you break away from your roommate, without seriously hurting her feelings and embarrassing yourself with her relatives? Only by pleading a "white lie." It seems to me you could only diplomatically extricate yourself from the existing arrangement by pleading "a tiresome desire" to get completely off to yourself somewhere; on account of (you might say) you are really a hermit by nature, and have need to loaf in solitude.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Perfume Secret

Ida Lupino, Warner Bros. star, tells us her favorite perfume secrets. Perfume on hat band is so delightful and fragrant to hair. A little inside the glove scents the hand and freshens the glove. A drop on the blotter in the stationery box scents the paper. For a rising fragrance, put a little perfume on hem of dress.

A Few Pounds Can Make You Look 'Settled'

By Ida Jean Kain

So you think reducing is aging? Well, there is nothing more aging than getting fat. Double-deck chins and a settled waist can add 10 years to anyone's looks.

Irene Hervey, a glamour girl on the screen and the very attractive Mrs. Allan Jones in private life, says that snapshots taken when a person is slightly overweight and then again after slimming down, tell the story of what excess weight does to you. Even a few pounds over the normal weight limit can change a woman into a settled matron and a candidate for character roles.

So Irene never permits the scales to go beyond 125 pounds for her height of 5 feet 5 inches. At that point she acts! Usually she stays around 120 pounds and thinks that must be right for her "because I feel so well. But once I let my hipline expand to 37 inches—and I hated myself!" Her measurements are svelte now—bust, 33½ inches; waist, 25 inches; hips, 35 inches.

Unique Diet

Since she works on a narrow margin, she has very little trouble with her weight. But there is one diet she occasionally follows for short intervals that is unique. You can eat as much and as often as you like—provided you don't eat anything except fruits and vegetables. If you try that one, you will have to be quite firm with yourself. You do not get any cream in your coffee, any bread, or any butter. Just fruits and vegetables—and the vegetables plain. Don't follow it for more than three days at a stretch.

Her movie player husband keeps an eye on his weight, too. Film actors and actresses have to keep trimmed down. The camera not only shows up any excess, but adds about 10 per cent to that! "Allan had to reduce not long ago for a picture," she said, "and I was amazed at how much younger he looked for taking off a few pounds."

For fun the Allan Joneses swim and play tennis so they keep in good condition without having to follow too strict a routine. They swim at least once every day.

Calisthenics Recommended

But if you are serious about getting a good figure, Irene recommends calisthenics. You might like to copy a couple of her own favorites. She has a waistline bender that is a honey. First, you stretch tall—set up on your toes with arms overhead and keep pushing up with your waist muscles. It's a kind of wriggle! Then circle down and around with your trunk and as you circle keep wriggling at the waist. That gives you an extra stretch.

To smooth the hipline, she holds out for a pummeling stunt "that nobody believes is as good as it really is!" Double up your fists and rain blows on the fat pads on the outside of the hips. "If you really work on them, you will see an improvement in two days," she promises.

Swims Daily to Keep Trim

Take a swim every day if you would keep trim, like Actress Irene Hervey, above. She and her actor husband eat virtually everything they want, but keep active. A daily swim is part of their routine.

Things to Come . . .

—In the World of Fashion

By Jane Driscoll

The Post Fashion Editor

Women's fashions from girdles to gloves are in a state of renaissance this fall. To keep you posted on this changing fashion picture, this column will give you each week a brief resume of "things to come." What changes to expect in handbags, jewelry, shoes, gloves, fabrics and other items of apparel will be covered. If you have any questions about new fall fashions, write Jane Driscoll, The Post Fashion Editor. She will be glad to include them.

HANDBAGS — Priorities on metal make zippers and metal frames less in evidence, but there is no priority on the size of bags. The old favorites the tailored underarm styles and the dress-up pouch are still here. Wooden frames are important. Along with stone and plastic frames they meet priorities demand.

Fabrics will carry right into fall. The bag you select for next season may be worn on and on, if you select it properly. Broadcloth and faille have the best wearing qualities.

Bags may be short on metal fastening, but they are long on ingenuous methods of self-closing. Drawstrings, hinged flaps, buckles, covered wooden slats and zigzag rectangles are only a few of the ways closings are being manipulated.

If it is a leather bag you are after, you'll probably select it because it looks sturdy. Fine capeskins will still be popular, but the bulk of leather bags in saddle leather, alligator calf, morocco and goatskin will be able to take it.

SHOES—Heels show the most important change in the shoes for fall. They are generally high or very low. (While in-betweeners are still to be had, it is taken for granted women are now rugged. They can go from high to low heels with the greatest of ease.) You will find, however, that low heels, even flats, are pretty and feminine—not strictly tailored.

Pump step-ins for afternoon and the dressy work shoe are the two general classifications. Rosettes, bows, draped and tied tongue effects and floppy ornaments perch on toes of afternoon shoes. Open toes and heels are still the preference.

The shoe you used to wear to work with your suits no longer looks as it were fresh from the country. Here again the tailored, low-heeled pump with square and wall lasts is a favorite. Stitching or adaptations of tongue treatments rolled into various shapes are simple trimmings. They keep the shoe tailored, but neat and dressy.

For you who go for active duty in a shoe, there are smart types in these. Some are blucher tie, moccasin or ghillie adaptations. Golden tobacco is the newest color—a cross between dark brown and tuft tan.

BLOUSES—These will be an integral part of your suit wardrobe this year. Since no three-piece outfits will be available (WPB rules) your blouse bids fair to be ing dressmaker in feeling.) You can also look forward to a larger selection of styles and the hope that your eternal blouse problem will be simplified.

Button-back styles and high-button front with dressmaker tucked detail types will be on a par with the softly tailored shirt blouse. Rayon crepes and woolly fabrics are the materials to watch for. (Manufacturers say there is no need to cry for pure silk—and in some cases the rayon crepes produced almost look like twins.)

Chilean Feminist Leaders Support Defense Measures

FOR the duration—feminist leaders in Chile are concentrating on defense measures rather than national suffrage. Largely responsible for the change in women's club policy is Graciela Mandujano, ardent feminist leader of Santiago.

In a recent letter to Miss Mary M. Cannon, inter-American representative, Women's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Senorita Mandujano wrote: "As an avocation, upon my return to Santiago from the United States I became terribly interested in organizing civilian defense. At present my women's organization, Movimiento Pro Emancipacion de la Mujer Chilena—called Memch's for short—is quite active."

She went on to explain that the Memch's had committees from north to south trying not so much to organize activities as in the United States but to create mass feeling about the dangers of Fifth Column propaganda, and the need to strengthen inter-American solidarity.

"However," she wrote, "political work must precede, at the moment, the more useful activities like training for first aid."

Spoke in U. S.

Under the auspices of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc. (U. S.), Senorita Mandujand made a speaking tour of the United States. Also, she will be remembered in Washington, where she attended the last conference of the Inter-American Commission of Women. It was upon her last visit to the Nation's Capital that the Chilean woman became war conscious.

Also on the alert for the cause of the Allied Nations in South America is Senora Ana Rosa de Martinez Guerrero of Buenos Aires, who often has visited Washington as a representative of her government.

Senora Ana Rosa de Martinez Guerrero

Writing to Miss Cannon, Senora de Martinez Guerrero reports that a group of young Argentine University Women have just been organized and that she is adviser to the youth movement. Purpose of this new youth organization is to persuade the officials of the Argentine government to go all-out on civilian defense in the country.

As for women's activities in Argentina, Senora de Martinez Guerrero writes: "Junta de La Victoria (The Victory Committee) takes up a large part of my time—the purpose which prompted its organization is to help the Allied Nations and the strengthening in the Argentine people of the democratic ideal—the only system of government compatible with our traditions."

Now 22,000 Members

A few days ago, Senora de Martinez Guerrero completed a trip through three Argentine provinces, Santa Fe, Buenos Aires and Entre Rios. In each capital and town she visited the Victory Committee, which now has 22,000 members and 40 branches in the interior.

In all the provinces visited she received demonstrations at meetings which had been organized in her honor. Some of the ovations came to her, she wrote, "as president of the Victory Committee and others as president of the Inter-American Commission of Women."

Women in Home Are Rising Gallantly to War's Changes

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

WE'RE all getting jogged out of comfortable ways of living these days. But American women are rising gallantly to the changed circumstances of war—to the demands on their time for war work—to the curtailment of many household services that have added so much to the convenience of living.

Mrs. L. B. K. writes that she is doing her own housework for the first time in years—her treasured maid left to take training as a nurse and Mrs. K. didn't try to replace her, partly because she knew she'd never find another she would like so well—partly because family finances had taken several tucks and darts from higher taxes, war bonds and increased living costs—partly because her children are big enough to help a lot and to look after themselves pretty well.

Equipment Repairing

The first thing that Mrs. K. discovered about working in her own house was that much of her equipment needed repairing; that many jobs were not organized for best efficiency. So she took her carpet sweeper to the repair man, oiled up the washing machine, put new pads on ironing board and mangle, reorganized her linen closet, shifted groceries and equipment around in the kitchen so that things were in the neatest positions and rearranged the kitchen table space and stove so that she had a U-shaped working unit, with everything in reach, in place of having to walk back and forth across a big kitchen.

This was accomplished by having a long counter built halfway across the middle of the room—this for informal meals in the kitchen. Between this counter and one wall she relocated all her main kitchen units—sink, refrigerator, stove and storage units—so she could stand in this space and be in reach of most all her jobs. Between the counter and the opposite wall was now practically empty, except for kitchen chairs, so here she placed her ironing board and stool, a rocker, and added a built-in desk and bookshelf for household planning. All together, the arrangement is very pleasant and practical and saves her miles of traveling during the course of her work.

A Critical Look

How long since you took a critical look at your household organization? Have you become so routined in your household schedule that you haven't thought recently about whether you're doing all these tasks in the most direct way? Sit down some morning with a pencil and paper and chart your daily route around the house. You may be surprised at how many shifts you could make to simplify many jobs.

British Women Find Health in Serving Nation

London, July 16—The general health and physical condition of British women in the services are not only good but are improving steadily, it was revealed at a recent Maternity and Child Welfare Conference, which was attended by about 600 women welfare and medical officers from industry and the services.

A remarkable improvement in the physique of British women of this war over the last is also apparent to those who were on health boards for the services then, according to Dr. Letitia Fairfield, woman medical director of the Royal Air Force medical service, who spoke at the conference.

There are far less rachitic and tubercular deformities, she said, many less cases of varicose veins and a marked improvement in personal hygiene among today's recruits. Although women entering the service must, in a few weeks, learn to march, drill, do manual work and live a community life, cases of complete breakdown have been uncommon.

The most noticeable improvement in health has been in the care and cure of foot ailments, it was revealed, which constitute the highest percentage of ailments among women entering the services. However, women have not been rejected for foot defects. Instead, scientifically designed shoes, careful education in foot hygiene and the provision of trained chiropodists have cured thousands of women of the foot ills with which they entered the services and have prevented a future breakdown in their health due to those ills.

It has been proved that, except for duties requiring heavy muscular strain or prolonged standing, women can replace men one to one. But women need more care, more privacy, a slower pace in the initial training and a slightly better scale of equipment and accomodation than men.

New Furniture Reflects Wartime Living

Clean cut and completely unadorned to suit today's simple way of life is the bedroom group pictured here, which is one of the features of the International Home Furnishings Show at Chicago. Made of bleached white curly maple trimmed in contrasting deep biscuit-toned mahogany, the beds are notable for their headboards and footboards of equal height, which makes it possible for them to be used at right angles. The dresser is distinguished by the drawer arrangement, divided down the center and of graduated depths. For information call National 4200, Extension 259.

WARTIME homefurnishing fashions reflect the American way of living in the new merchandise shown at the International Home-furnishing Market now being held in Chicago.

Material shortages have been fashion assets rather than restrictions. Following the national pattern of conservation, furniture manufacturers have introduced double duty and space-saving features of exquisite simplicity.

Emphasis has been put on the everyday demands of the wartime homemaker, rather than on startling innovations and experimental whims. But this has not produced dull and uninteresting furniture. Gaiety and simplicity, as opposed to formal and ornate effects, are the rule.

Modern, in many woods, and Eighteenth Century, in mahogany, continue to be the prime favorites in furniture styles, with Provincial a minor favorite of the traditional group.

Furniture that can be folded like the tents of the Arabs and moved on with great ease is an innovation. This is of special interest to service families who must move about from post to post and also factory workers whose business leads them into new defense manufacturing areas. Even the lamps can be collapsed into forms that can be packed and shipped easily.

Tables are doubly interesting in their double-duty way. No longer does the table serve but a single purpose, such as for dining, for lamps for bridge or mere decoration. They are now designed to serve a combination of needs in a variety of room settings.

Bridge table sizes or console shapes are made to extend by means of leaves that pull out to full dining size. Enormous wide, low coffee tables have adjustable legs to raise them to dining table heights and nests of end tables are especially suitable for serving buffet meals.

The proportions of the tablet, too, have undergone changes, with some of the smartest coffee tables built of unusual length and of but 18-inch width. Lamp tables are lower and wider, so that they better balance the ever increasing size of the lamps now being shown.

Lamps too have met the wartime challenge for all critical metals. Pottery, glass and wood bases are much in evidence. Ray Sea, well-known designer, has created lamps to serve double duty purpose, with their bases made to hold small statuettes and pieces of bric-a-brac.

Petroleum Ideal Substitute For Animal Oil in Soaps

Housewives need have no fears about the soap shortage which is expected when our present supply of animal and vegetable oil imports is exhausted, according to a report to the American Chemical Society by Dr. Lawrence Flett of the national aniline division of Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, Buffalo, N. Y. Detergents from petroleum, a domestic product, with properties superior to soap, will be available to them.

"Whatever our shortages in animal and vegetable oil may be," Dr. Flett reports, "we do have an abundant supply of petroleum. The United States production of petroleum is not measured by a billion pounds, but by a billion barrels every year."

These new synthetics will also help the food industry, Dr. Flett indicates. "Our ability to make detergents from petroleum makes potentially possible the release of two billion pounds of fats and oils to become foodstuffs. This would increase by more than 30 per cent the amount of oils and fats available for food."

The new cleaning agents, far from being poor but necessary substitutes, have many advantages over soap, Dr. Flett asserts. "For several thousand years, in fact for practically the entire existence of civilization, soap has had a monopoly of the cleaning business. It has become such a common factor in our lives that we do not realize the limited conditions under which it can be used.

"Soap must be used in warm to hot water. The washing solution must be alkaline. Lime salts and heavy metal salts must not be present in sufficient amount to precipitate all the soap. Such salts should preferably be absent. The water used must not be too salty.

"The new synthetic detergents will work under any and all conditions. They wash in acid as well as in alkaline solutions; they clean cold; and they clean hot. They wash better in hard water than in distilled water. They wash in sea water. These detergents can be used even with the heavy metal salts in industrial electroplating baths."

Dry Cleaning Not Rationed

Contrary to some rumors, the National Association of Dyers and Cleaners states there is no shortage of dry cleaning materials. This is good news to everyone struggling to make one dress do where three served before. If we had curtailed dry cleaning as well as curtailed wardrobes, it would be a pretty priority pickle indeed.

Quality dry cleaning is very much available and prices have been fixed so that even the very best cleaning will be within easy reach of war pocketbooks.

Union Accepts 'Little Steel' Pay Order

Thursday the Administration won another victory in its fight against inflation by forcing the farm bloc to permit the sale of Government-held wheat for feed purposes at 85 per cent of corn parity, a measure expected to protect the public against increases in the price of meat.

Acceptance effectively quieted fears that steel production necessary to the war effort might be threatened by a strike in protest against the WLB ruling. Murray had previously been reported ready to submit the question of rejecting the wage ruling to a referendum of his union members, thus laying the groundwork for a strike. It was reported in Washington last night that Murray abandoned this plan after a conference with President Roosevelt in Washington Thursday.

The White House conference was held in secrecy and was not officially admitted until yesterday morning, when the President alluded to it in his press conference.

Spotlight Now on Companies

Murray thus acted to turn the spotlight off the steel union and on the four steel companies—Inland, Bethlehem, Republic, and Youngstown—none of whom has indicated whether it will accept the decision. The companies have previously stated that they were considering forcing a court test of the board order of union maintenance and checkoff. None of them has ever signed a contract with a bona fide labor union.

By his action, Murray was indirectly placing his reluctant stamp of approval on War Labor Board orders which might deny or sharply reduce $1 a day wage increase demands from 400,000 automobile workers employed by General Motors, Ford and Chrysler, and to a possible refusal by the War Production Board West Coast aircraft wage stabilization conference to grant the bulk of the large wage increase demands of a million aircraft workers.

Woven into the board's decision was the design for a national wage policy which the board would like used as the guide for all future wage adjustments for the duration of the to receive increases to the extent war. The program permits workers needed to restore their purchasing power to January 1, 1941, levels. A 15 per cent increase in the cost of living between January 1, 1941, and May 1, 1942, when the President's stabilization program was placed into effect was recognized in the board's decision.

As interpreted yesterday by a wage expert familiar with WLB procedure, use of the January 1, 1941 "yardstick" will prevent the highly paid Ford workers from receiving any wage increase. General Motors and Chrysler workers conceivably would be granted increases of "token" proportions, probably less than 4 cents an hour. If applied to aircraft wages, it probably would rule out any general increase, although some adjustment might be granted to individual groups of workers to "iron out inequalities" as specifically provided in the President's stabilization message to Congress.

President Roosevelt's telegram to Murray includede the following statement:

"I want you to know that I realize your problem and appreciate your responsibility.

"I consider that control of the threatening rise of the cost of living is of paramount domestic importance. Our Government needs every possible authority to control the mounting cost of living.

"Besides this authority, the Government must have the complete cooperation of the people and I have confidence that we shall have this cooperation from our citizens in all walks of life, including the steel workers who look to you for leadership. With such cooperation, we shall win the fight."

Murray Sounds Warning

Revealing hat the War Labor Board had warned him that it would ask the President to exercise his war powers in the event the union defied the order, Murray told the delegates:

"He is the President and he occupies the highest office in the land. In war, the powers of the President are unlimited.

Faced with this virtual "ultimatum" and Murray's earnest plea that the men accept the ruling, despite their demands for a $1 wage boost, the committee accepted and passed a resolution which said in part:

"The conference has carefully read and analyzed the decision of the National War Labor Board . . .

"We have also read with appreciation the message forwarded to us today by President Roosevelt. . . .

"We are gratified at the decision of the War Labor Board in determining that the United Steel Workers of America both needs and deserves the establishment of union security and the check-off.

"The answer of the United Steel Workers of America is that we accept the award of the National Labor Board. As workers we embrace the opportunity of being in the forefront in carrying out the national policy which will aid our Nation in its war for total survival.

"In the spirit of President Roosevelt's message, we call upon the corporations involved in this proceeding to accept the award of the National War Labor Board in the interests of national unity."

Asked at his press conference whether he planned to send another message to Congress on inflation, the President replied that the whole question was under study. He pointed out that the steel wage rise would not necessarily increase the cost of living in the same way that a wage increase in a canning factory would.

On Capitol Hill it was learned last week that Congress had been asked to stand by for a possible White House request for wage-control legislation. Admittedly, Murray's acceptance of the WLB order made it less likely that wage controls would be enacted.

That wage legislation had not been completely ruled out, however, was indicated by a reliable report that Price Administrator Leon Henderson and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins have been working on the draft of a bill to freeze all wages for 90 days to provide a "breathing spell" for price control. The report was received prior to the Pittsburgh announcement.

WLB Orders 'Little Steel' To Accept Union Maintenance

The four steel companies comprising "little steel," all long known as strongholds of the "open shop," were faced yesterday with an order from the War Labor Board to abandon their traditional policy and grant the C. I. O. United Steel Workers of America a mantenance of membership plan combined with a checkoff of union dues.

The board presented its proposal for union security in this case as "primarily a timely provision for a more stable basis for maximum production for winning the war." The order was incorporated in the board's decision on the union's demand for a general wage advance of $1 a day, but its importance was generally overlooked when the decision was announced Thursday because of the more immediate interest in the national wage yardstick announced by WLB.

The board termed its plan, which must be included in collective bargaining contracts being negotiated by the companies and the union "a voluntarily accepted, binding maintenance of membership and checkoff." The plan gives all union members—about 70 per cent of the 157,000 employes involved—a chance to withdraw from the union within the next two weeks. Those who fail to do so must remain union members for the duration of the contract and have their union dues of $1 a month deducted from their paychecks by the companies and turned over to the union. The WLB order in effect rejected a union demand for a union shop.

"Companies" Attitude in Doubt

Whether the four steal companies—Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown, and Inland—would accept the WLB edict was the subject of considerable speculation in labor circles yesterday. None of the concerns have ever signed a collective bargaining contract with a bona-fide labor union.

The board order was issued by a vote of 8 to 4, with employer members dissenting. The employer members proposed that the union be required to file a semi-annual financial statement before the plan could be ordered.

Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and public member of WLB, wrote an eloquent defense of the board's action which his associate public board members have praised unstintingly as a "historic document in the field of labor relations."

The decision, Graham stated, "protects both the individual freedom of the workers and the essential security of the union."

"Stability for this union is a contribution to winning the war," Dr. Graham said, "not only because, technologically, it involves steel as the metal most essential to mechanized war, but also because, democratically, it involves the right of the steel workers to self-organization in a free and secure union as basic to the structure of American freedom. The steel and human beings, the machines and ideas, the technology and democracy, involved in this case are the stuff of our American mechanisms and historic convictions with which and for which the war is fought and must be won."

Reviews History of Struggle

Graham stated that the "long and bitter struggle" between the steel companies and organized labor provided grounds for the board's grant of union security.

The history of the steel workers' battle to organize "against heavy odds" is still "vivid in the lore of the steel families," Graham said. Tracing the main outlines of this struggle, he stated that "meanwhile the scars of past industrial wars remained deep."

"Workers' memories in the steel towns included terrorism and counter-terrorism, mass picketing and mass smear hysteria, jailing of union leaders, injunctions, suppression of meetings of workers and their civil liberties, discriminations against union members, espionage, blacklists, discharges, evictions, muster of company guards, Pinkerfton levies, imported strike breakers and the State Militia. The steelworkers remember that, even in their new day, Section 7 A (of the old National Recovery Act) was answered with the organization of company unions and the National Labor Relations Act (the Wagner Act) was stubbornly resisted in the courts."

Citing a "recently more hopeful record" arising out of the willingness of the companies to bargain with the union, Graham said that "the historic memories, potential fears and consuming energies of old private wars between steel companies and steel unions now gives place to the total war of unions, corporations and a united America against Hitler and the Axis powers."

Maintenance of membership "by and large . . . makes for the maintenance of responsible union leadership and responsible union discipline, makes for keeping faithfully the terms of the contract, and provides a stable basis for union-management cooperation for more efficient production," the North Carolina college president said.

The checkoff was needed because the company refused to allow dues collection on company property and eliminates dues picket lines "and their attendant abuses," permitting the union officials to concentrate on increasing production, he said.

Denies Company Contention

He denied a company contention that the question of union security was not properly before the board under the labor-industry no-strike-or-lockout agreement which provided the basis for WLB's creation by presidential order. The companies "would substitute the jurisdiction of the picket lines for the jurisdiction of the board, and would cause a breakdown of production to replace our present unparalleled and almost unbroken production in a critical year."

In their dissent, the employer members objected to what they termed a "fixed policy" to grant maintenance of membership to unions.

"The employer members are unalterably opposed to the board's present trend toward the application of this or any other formula as a concession to unions in all or most cases coming before it . . . We believe the concession given to the union in this case is not in the best interests of the Nation. We are in a struggle for existence, too, and to win this war, selfish interests must be subordinated to the national good."

Specifically objecting to the imposition of the checkoff, the employers stated that "if the workers were convinced of the benefits to be derived from financial support of the unions, no compulsion would be necessary, nor would it be necessary for the union officials to form dues collection picket lines which are now impeding war production."

1000 Men Call Work Stoppage At Pennsylvania Plane Plant

Beaver, Pa., July 17 (AP).—Members of the C. I. O. United Steel Workers of America began a work stoppage today at the Pennsylvania plant of the Curtiss-Wright Co.

A union spokesman who declined use of his name said a "large number of the night shift of 1000 to 1100 employes refused to work with non-union men, who number about 19."

He said the union and company have been negotiating for a new contract to supplant one which expired June 20. Points under discussion, he said, were "wages, union shop and check-off of union dues."

"On Friday the union negotiating committee asked the company if it would abide by the War Labor Board decision in the Little Steel case, which was announced yesterday. The company refused," he said, adding:

"This morning we received notice from the company that as conciliators were at the plant, it was postponing negotiations until further notice."

Detroit Strikers Ready to Work

Detroit, July 17 (AP).—Strikers who partially disrupted Detroit's publicly owned transportation system today voted at a five-hour meeting tonight to return to work, but whether their action would mean a complete restoration of service immediately remained in doubt.

Officials of the Department of Street Railways said they were prepared to carry out Mayor Edward J. Jeffries' orders to suspend the strikers and to refuse to let them work on the system.

"I'm glad this strike is over," Mayor Jeffries said. "But I am bitterly disappointed that it ever happened. I'm still mad.

"I have made no change in my attitude that the leaders must be punished. We are serving two million people with this transportation system and it must be maintained at all costs."

Buffalo Strike Continues

Buffalo, N. Y., July 17 (AP).—Striking employes of the American Magnesium Corp.'s aircraft material plant voted today to continue their walkout and meet again tomorrow to consider Government and union appeals that the stoppage end.

After long debate, the workers neither rejected nor accepted proposals that they return to work pending a hearing before the War Labor Board in Washington.

Approximately 1000 employes, members of the C. I. O. United Mine Workers, struck yesterday and furnaces were shut down.

Commander R. S. Smith, resident inspector of the Navy Department, told a meeting of strikers "there is a desperate need for every pound you can turn out to supply the forces fighting all over the world."

Massachusetts Strikes Still On

Boston, July 17 (AP).—Labor and management representatives resumed efforts today to settle a chemical workers' strike that a company official said would "cripple production in 250 Eastern plants and affect more than 250,000 employes."

The strike was called three days ago in two plants—the Monsanto Chemical Co. and its subsidiary, the New England Alcohol Co., both in Everett and both working on war orders.

International Union Averts Milk Strike

10-Day Deferment Voted After Threat Is Made to Revoke Charter of Local

A city-wide strike of milk drivers that would have halted deliveries to homes, stores and all other outlets except hospitals and military posts was averted last night by last-minute intervention of the A. F. of L. Teamsters International Union.

Postponement of the walkout for 10 days was voted by members of Local 246, Milk Drivers and Dairymen's Union, on receipt of word from the international that the local's charter would be revoked if the strike took place.

The milkmen, meeting at Turner's Arena, also heard a telegraphed appeal from Dr. John R. Steelman, director of the United States Conciliation Service, and pleas from their own leaders, including Business Agent Eugene R. Hubbard, that the strike be delayed 10 days pending additional efforts by the conciliation service to effect an agreement on demands for higher wages and fewer hours.

Protests Shouted

Although they appeared overwhelmingly in favor of an immediate strike when the meeting was called, the final vote was 687 to 300 for a 10-day postponement.

A transcription of the National Anthem was played during the session to restore order, so voluble were members in shouting their protests against delaying the walkout.

At a previous meeting on July 2, the membership gave the negotiating committee power to call a strike and leaders intimated Thursday, following breakdown of conferences with representatives of all the 11 dairies involved, that the drivers would be called out in 24 hours.

A. F. L. Promise Cited

Intervention of the international union, however, put a different light on the matter. In threatening to revoke the local's charter, International Vice President and General Organizer Dave Beck cited the A. F. L.'s promise to forego all strikes for the duration of the war.

The threat came after Conciliation Director Steelman communicated with Daniel Tobin, international president, and other international officers in an effort to have them intercede against a strike.

Another eleventh-hour development was the receipt of a telegram during the meeting from Herman A. Schulteis, chairman of the dairies' negotiating committee, indicating he would "take under advisement" the union's reiteration of a proposal for arbitration of the dispute by an arbiter to be appointed by Dr. Steelman. This telegram, however, was greeted with boos.

3 Government Workers Join WAAC; One Is Rifle Expert

JEANNE McSHEEHY — RUTH ESSARY — RUTH BREWER — HELEN SHEETS

An expert shot, a columnists's daughter and a flying War Department research analyst, all of Washington, will be sworn in Monday, as Women's Auxiliary Army Corps officer candidates.

The young women—Ruth G. Brewer, 24, Ruth H. Essary, 22, and Jeanne McSheehy, 24—will be inducted at the Army Recruiting Station here and report for training August 3 at Fort Des Moines, Iowa.

At the training center they will join eight other officer candidates from Washington, Helen Woddell Sheets, Evelyn F. Green, Mattie E. Treadwell, Grace P. Campbell, Mrs. Marjorie Dawson Fling, Helen Woods, Mrs. Harriet West and Janis M. Hight, who took the oath last week and will report for training Monday.

A District Board of Public Welfare social worker, Miss Brewer was a member of the women's rifle team at George Washington University, from which she was graduated in 1938. She also was a member of Mortar Board and in her senior year received the Pi Beta Phi award for performing the most constructive work in student activities.

Worked in FBI

While at G. W. U. she was secretary to Harvey Jacob, Washington lawyer, after which she was awarded a research fellowship at Vineland Training School, where she studied in 1938 and 1939. She studied at Catholic University in 1939, 1940 and 1941, working at the same time as a clerk in the Federal Bureau of Investigation and received the degree of master of science in social work.

A native of Glenn Dale, Md., Miss Brewer lives with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Brewer, at 1324 Monroe Street Northwest. Her father is a Spanish-American War veteran.

Daughter of the late J. Fred Essary, long-time Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, and Helen Essary, Washington Times-Herald columnist, Miss Essary attended Holton-Arms School and George Washington University here and the Chateau Brillantmont in Switzerland. She leaves a job with the Army Air Forces to join the WAAC.

War Intelligence Worker

Miss McSheehy, a licensed airplane pilot, has been an assistant research analyst in the intelligence branch of the War Department since April.

Daughter of a retired Naval officer, she came to Washington from Coronado, Calif., four years ago after graduation from Mills College, Calif., where she was a Phi Beta Kappa, chairman of the Student Forum, captain and manager of the varsity basketball team and member of the swimming and tennis teams.

She was a public administration interne at the National Institute of Public Affairs and worked in various Federal agencies here before her employment by the War Department. In the meantime she took graduate work in public administration at American University and learned about airplanes in a George Washington University pilot training course. She owns one-sixth of an airplane at Schromm Airport and would like to dispose of her interest in the craft as well as a couple of automobiles.

Thumb Treated, Workman Falls Out of Window

A Pennsylvania Railroad employe went to have an injured thumb treated yesterday in Union Station, walked out of the doctor's office and tumbled out of a window down a 20-foot areaway, suffering a fractured left leg and lacerations of the head and right arm.

He was Harry E. Dallmus, 53, passenger train brakeman. Dallmus' right thumb had been "tipped" in an accident on a train sometime last week, and yesterday he went to the office of the company doctor to receive treatment. According to Mrs. Frances Taylor, nurse in the office, Dallmus apparently became faint on leaving the office, sat down on a window ledge and toppled over.

War Stimulating Cupid; Marriage Rate Sets Record

The war is still having a strong stimulative effect on courtship, the Census Bureau noted yesterday in reporting the highest marriage rate in United States history in 1941.

The marriage rate hit 12.6 persons out of every 1000 population last year. This approximates 1,679,000 marriages—7.3 per cent more than in 1940 and 22.1 per cent more than in 1939.

"With the outbreak of hostilities in Europe, there was an abrupt increase in the marriage rate," the bureau noted, and: "The passage of the Selective Service Act in September, 1940, was followed by an enormous increase."

Eklund Gets Term of 15 Years to Life

Justice Norris Ignores Mercy Plea Offered by Sniper Slayer's Attorney

John Eugene Eklund yesterday began serving a prison term of 15 years to life for the "sniper" slaying more than a year and a half ago of Hyland G. McClaine, 17-year-old Negro.

In passing sentence yesterday morning, Justice James W. Morris of District Court ignored a plea for mercy by Eklund's attorney, Harry T. Whelan, and imposed the stiffest penalty allowed by law for second degree murder.

"I feel," the jurist said, "that the jury has reached conclusions favorable to the defendant. There is no room for further leniency."

Eklund, once an engineering student at George Washington University, took the pronouncement of his fate with the same apparent stoicism with which he heard the jury's verdict Monday following his brazen break from deputy marshals a week ago and his capture by an auxiliary policeman 37 hours later.

His Mother Wept

His mother, Mrs. Sadie Eklund, wept throughout the two-minute proceeding.

Under provisions of the law, Justice Morris later explained to The Post, the maximum penalty for second degree murder shall be between 20 years and life imprisonment. If the court sees fit—as did Morris—to impose the life sentence, then the minimum term must be fixed at 15 years. In all other cases, the minimum must be set at one-third of the maximum.

Another indictment, charging the first degree murder of two of the four other "sniper" victims, is still pending against the 27-year-old Eklund. But Assistant United States Attorney Charles B. Murray, who was coprosecutor with John W. Fihelly, indicated that the Government would reserve judgment on the indictment until the fall.

Two Others Shot in 1940

The indictment names Eklund as the slayer of Theodore I. Goffney and Samuel Banks, both Negroes, on October 6, 1940—only nine days before the fatal shooting of McClaine. The double murder occurred in front of 2600 I Street Northwest as the pair was sitting on a bench in front of Banks' home.

Because the Government's case against Eklund was strongest in the McClaine shooting, only the one charge was brought. Eklund was arrested November 16 in a Baltimore rooming house. On June 6, 1941, a District Court jury found him guilty of first degree murder and he was sentenced to die in the electric chair. A new trial was granted however, when it was discovered that a Government witness had committed perjury in testifying that he had no criminal record.

Beating Proves Fatal

Alberta Washington, 29, Negro of the 200 block of B Street Southwest, died last night at Gallinger Hospital of a fractured skull suffered in a beating, police said. A 29-year-old Negro suspect was arrested and ordered held for a coroner's inquest today.

D. C. Area Steel Strike End in Sight

Official Hopeful 80 Employes Of 2 Plants Will Return Monday

The Labor Department's conciliation branch last night reported itself "hopeful" that approximately 80 employes of two steel fabricating plants here and in Arlington who took a "vacation" on Wednesday would "be back on the job Monday morning."

The walkout occurred during the midst of prolonged negotiations over a new wage contract and served to cripple a number of war projects in the metropolitan area.

The wage dispute is in the hands of Howard Colvin, regional director for the conciliation branch, who declined to say on what basis he was hopeful of reaching a settlement.

Demands Not Met

The workers—68 from the Roslyn Steel & Cement Co., 3031 K Street Northwest, and "12 or more" from the Hudson Supply & Equipment Co., Arlington Ridge Road, Arlington—left their jobs Wednesday at 2:30 p. m. after their employers had failed to meet demands for a reclassification of workers with accompanying wage increases ranging from 18 to 32 per cent.

According to President W. C. Kiesler of the Rosslyn firm, a counter-proposal providing a general average wage increase of 10 per cent was made by the employers, but the two sides were not able to get together during the two-week negotiations which preceded the "vacation."

Kiesler's firm fabricates reinforcing steel for the new War Department bulding in Arlington and for bridges which will be a part of the new highway system there; for the Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md., the Naval Training Center, McLean Gardens, Naylor Gardens, and for the dormitories which are being erected for Negroes near Howard University. The Hudson company has been performing a similar service for the torpedo plant in Alexandria, the new photographic laboratory at the Naval Air Station, Anacostia, and for various other jobs at the Navy Yard.

Points to Price Ceilings

Kiesler said it was impossible for his firm to meet the workers' demands and still stay within the Office of Price Administration ceilings placed over its price structure, and the Hudson firm said its position was similar in all respects to that of Kiesler's.

The Labor Department was first called into the controversy on Tuesday, Kiesler said, but on the following day the workers walked out. He quoted Henry Duckworth, business agent of Shopmen's Local Union, No. 486, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, A. F. L., with which all of the "vacation workers" are affiliated, as saying that he was powerless to stop them. Duckworth could not be reached for comment.

Both companies said there had been no violence, no picketing, and that none of their union employes in other trades had walked out "in sympathy" with the iron workers.

Four Firemen Are Promoted; One Is Retired

The District Commissioners yesterday approved the promotions of two high ranking firemen and the retirement of a third, Capt John R. Moore, of Engine Company 25, who will leave the service August 1 because of physical disability. Two privates were promoted to sergeancies.

Lieut. Thomas S. Baber, a fireman for 31 of his 58 years, was elevated to a captaincy and Sergt. Theodore W. Martin, 39, moved up to lieutenant.

All three men have been officially commended for outstanding exploits during their long careers. Capt. Moore, 54, with 31 years of service behind him, was cited for his work at the Kann warehouse fire in 1925 and at the Knickerbocker Theater disaster in 1922. Lieut. Baber was commended for his services on the same two occasions and Sergt. Baker has received recognition for recovering a drowning victim's body from the Potomac River in 1934.

Baber likely will be transferred to Engine Company 15, Fourteenth and W Streets Southeast, succeeding Capt. Leo B. Wilson, now on military leave with the Coast Guard.

Other personnel changes approved yesterday included the advancement of Privates Everett T. Haas and William H. Yonce to sergeants, and the issuance of probationary appointments to Curtis G. Millar and Pasquale E. Ciufolo.

N. J. Police Hunt Assault Suspect

New Jersey State police last night were requested by Washington authorities to search for a 25-year-old Negro identified as the assailant of a 20-year-old War Production Board stenographer Thursday morning.

The alarm was sent out after police learned the suspect has a sister living in the State and that he visits her frequently.

The stenographer was attacked in her bedroom in the 3500 block Warder Street Northwest, but managed to fight off the man by pushing an electric fan into his face. She also struck him over the head with a chair.

Bombs Bursting in Air

Planes Roar Overhead, Flames Color Sky in Mock Air Raid

Bombs exploded and flames shot skyward in a realistic air raid demonstration staged last night by the Chemical Warfare Service of the Army before 2500 persons in a field just north of Byrd Stadium at College Park, Md.

The demonstration was witnessed by Army and civilian defense officials and by representatives of the British and Canadian Governments. Guests included James M. Landis, executive director of the OCD; Maj. Gen. William N. Porter, chief of the Chemical Warfare School; Col. J. V. Fisher, chief of the civilian protection school of the War Department; Brig. Gens. U. S. Grant, 3d, George Wilson and Paul English, all of the Chemical Warfare School; Air marshal D. S. C. Evill of the R. A. F. and George Roundwhaite, chairman of the Canadian Purchasing Commission.

Officers attached to the civilian defense chemical warfare school at the University of Maryland opened the show by demonstrating methods of extinguishing incendiary blazes. This was followed by a similar demonstration by six university coeds.

Another demonstration showed the futility of trying to extinguish incendiary fires by use of carbon dioxide or carbon tetrachloride. When these agents were sprayed on the blazes they burned as merrily as ever.

Service Men Can Get Recaps if Certified

Army and Navy men who must drive to work will be able to get recapped tires if their commanding officers certify the need, OPA announced yesterday. Heretofore they could get recaps or inner tubes only when serving as technical men on construction jobs or in war plants.

To qualify for tires, the service man and his commanding officer must be able to satisfy the local rationing board as to need and the absence of other practicable means of transportation.

Howard U. Implements 'Preinduction' Plan

Approximately 300 male students at Howard University will be deferred from military service this year so as to complete their education, provided they enlist and maintain expected averages in the Army Enlisted Reserve, it was announced by Howard University.

Under this preinduction plan, formed to supply educated Negroes to the civilian and military activities, freshman entering the fall term will be deferred for four years on the condition that they enter this Army Enlisted Reserve. Those already in school will be deferred on the same basis, it was said. Junior and senior students taking premedical courses will not be inducted until they have completed these courses.

Instruction in various military fields has been inaugurated in the summer sessions, now accommodating 1000 students.

It also was announced that the school would return to the quarter system, whereby a student could enter and graduate in any quarter. Beginning with the fall term evening classes in the law school will be held. School officials said, however, that tentatively the plan will cover only the 1932-43 term. These classes will operate from 6 to 8 p. m. or 7 to 9 p. m. from Monday through Friday each week.

Trinidad Area to Open Air-Raid Post Tomorrow

A newly-built air raid sector post for the Trinidad area, designated as Sector Post 1, Zone 4, will be officially opened tomorrow at 2:30 p. m. with a ceremony highlighted by flag-raising by a color guard of the Seventy-first Coast Artillery.

The post, at Eighteenth Place and Mount Olive Road Northeast, is an asphalt-shingled, one-story structure. Fully equipped, it was built by contributions of money, materials, and labor from the area residents. Paul C. Dutrow, 1213 Eighteenth Street Northeast, is sector warden.

Five Injured In Traffic In D. C. Area

Woman, 28, Critically Hurt When Struck By Streetcar at MacArthur Blvd.

Five persons were injured in traffic accidents here and in nearby Maryland yesterday and last night.

Mrs. Erma Burnett, 28, was critically hurt when struck by a streetcar near her home at Stop No. 27 on MacArthur Boulevard. She was removed to Georgetown University Hospital by the Glen Echo rescue squad. Physicians said her condition was critical.

Also seriously hurt was 13-year-old Fred Johnson of 1524 Gales Street Northeast, who received a broken right leg when he and his cousin, Harry Johnson, 15 of 820 H Street Northeast, were knocked from a bicycle by a five-ton truck.

Both boys were riding on one bicycle in the 1200 block Constitution Avenue Northwest, when a United States Marine Corps truck, operated by Charles Bender of the Depot of Supplies, Philadelphia, knocked them to the street. The truck struck two automobiles before it was halted.

Fred was taken to Casualty, Harry went to Providence Hospital, where he was given first aid for brush burns to his back and cuts.

The driver of the truck told police he swerved to avoid striking a delivery truck which was parked abreast, that he grazed the truck, struck the boys and then hit a coupe driven by Mrs. Helen S. Fitch, 31 of Hyattsville, Md.

Charles M. Potter, 60, of Silver Spring, Md., was treated at Emergency Hospital yesterday morning for cuts and bruises after he was struck by a car at Fourteenth and G Streets Northwest.

He was running toward a loading platform, police said, when he was knocked down by an automobile operated by Charles A. Norfolk of 614 Tenth Street Southwest.

Five-year-old Gloria Washington, Negro of 3204 Fifteenth Street Southeast, suffered a broken shoulder when she ran into the path of an auto in front of her home. She was admitted to Gallinger Hospital.

Negro, 20, Held For Jury on Joyriding Charge

A 20-year-old Negro, the object of a 70-mile-an-hour chase by police early Tuesday morning, was arraigned in Municipal Court yesterday and held under $2000 bond for grand jury action on a charge of "joyriding."

The youth, William E. Brooks of 1845 Vernon Street Northwest, first appeared before Judge John P. McMahon in Traffic Court and was sentenced to the maximum of 180 days for driving without a permit. Judge McMahon also imposed an additional three months and a fine of $250 for reckless driving.

Later, before Judge Brice Clagett, Policeman Harry A. Deaner, testified that he and another officer, H. C. League, sighted a car for which they had been asked to keep a lookout, and set out after it. The car sped away and a 4-mile chase ensued from the neighborhood of Walter Reed Hospital to a downtown Street. At Sixteenth and Corcoran Streets Northwest, the officer said, the car crashed into a parked automobile, damaging three others.

A young Negro, later identified as Brooks, jumped from the stalled machine and there was another chase—this time on foot. Brooks was finally apprehended after scaling a drain pipe and breaking through a window into an apartment, it was testified.

At a conference yesterday in the District Building Glenn protested that he would not accept a mandatory order for the new rates, claiming that by agreement with the House District Committee after the union-called taxi strike on June 24 drivers were to be allowed their choice of the new or old rates until the question was definitely settled.

On grounds that the zone trial and promised hearing on the new map keep the question still open, Glenn stated that the PUC could not put its order into effect except at the individual choice of the drivers.

The incident was related in the PUC order recommending that the Commissioners ask the board of revocation and review of character licenses to study the matter. The order stated:

"Thereupon Edwin A. Glenn questioned the authority of the Commission to issue any order which would require the taxicab drivers to abide by such new rates until all questions pertaining to both rates and boundaries had been disposed of. Asked by the chairman of the commission whether he would refuse to abide by the lawful orders of this commission, Edwin A Glenn answered that he would refuse to do so.

"In view of the above facts, it is evident to this commission that Edwin A. Glenn is not interested in effecting equitable regulations for taxicab operations in the District of Columbia, that it is not his desire to put an end to all controversies relating to zones and boundaries, that he is not willing to abide by any agreements made by him or any lawful orders issued by the PUC with reference to the operation of taxicabs in the District of Columbia. It is the opinion of the commission that Edwin A. Glenn is not a fit and proper person to be a licensed taxicab driver in the District of Columbia." PUC Commissioner Charles W. Kutz dissented from the order.

Glenn, who said he had walked out of the conference because "they couldn't talk about anything but personalities and technicalities," announced that he had written letters to 13 members of Congress, and that his next move would depend upon the reaction of these Representatives. Following that, he said he would get a lawyer and proceed against the PUC.

It was understood that in these letters Glenn urged the House District Committee again to take the taxi situation in hand, stating that it was only a waste of time to sit down with the PUC.

Further to break up the short-lived peace in the ranks of the taxi industry, P. U. C. Chairman Gregory Hankin, after holding Glenn to the terms of a supposed agreement, told Ringgold Hart, Diamond Cab counsel, and John H. Royer, jr., spokesman for 21 cab companies, that the PUC itself had not entered into any agreement.

Hankin's point, as expressed freely about the District Building during the last three days, was that "the PUC, as a quasi-judicial body, could not bargain with anybody under the responsibility with which it was charged by Congress."

Hart, who had marshaled the diverse factions of the cab industry into a united front, replied that it was the understanding of everyone present at the Tuesday pre-hearing meeting that an agreement had, indeed, been made between the PUC and the taxi representatives and that all of the Washington newspapers had so recorded it.

Royer, who had agreed to the compromise only after Glenn had said that he would put it up to his men and thought he could convince them, was equally certain that the PUC had entered into the bargain as an active agent.

Possibility of a so-called "vacation" among the taxi drivers loomed last night when the board of directors of the United Taxicab Drivers, Inc., at a special meeting, rejected Hankin's proposal to use his zone rate and measure map.

James Shenos, counsel for the organization, presided over the meeting, and said:

"Therefore, Hankin's proposal is rejected, which places us again in the same position we were in on June 24 and which may bring again the continuance of the 'vacation' which was recessed on that date."

'Wings for the Eagle' Flies High at the Earle

Ann Sheridan, Dennis Morgan, Jack Carson Star In Comedy-Romance of Industry in War Effort; Billy House's 'Lunatic Revue' Enlivens Stage

"WINGS FOR THE EAGLE." Warner Brothers' picturization of a screen play by Byron Morgan and B. H. Orkow, with additional dialogue by Richard Macauley, costarring Ann Sherdian, Dennis Morgan and Jack Carson, with George Tobias, Russell Arms, Don DeFore, Tom Fadden, John Ridgely, Frank Wilcox, George Meeker, Fay Helm, Billy Curtis, Emory Parnell and Edgar Dearing. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. At the Earle Theater.

IN "WINGS FOR THE EAGLE," the Warner Brothers have contrived a screen play that combines the factual information of a "documentary" with a predominant note of romantic comedy in such proportions as to afford interesting and fast-moving entertainment against a background that may never again be made available to Hollywood.

The film is dedicated to the industrial war effort and the stiffening of morale among those who are fighting the war out of uniform and with machine-tools instead of machine guns. The scene is the vast Lockheed airplane factory on the West Coast and for the first time—and presumably the last—the assembly line is shown in complete, but not too detailed, operation. The fictional story that threads the action into an intimate and lively study of divergent viewpoints and aspirations among the plant workers is perhaps a little threadbare in spots, but the vital purpose of the play is fulfilled by a touch of tragedy near its end.

Corky Jones wangles his way onto the Lockheed payrolls to evade the draft by employment in essential war work. Arriving at the plant he runs across a beautiful young woman who turns out to be the wife of the old college football pal who has taken him in as a "star boarder" before Roma has returned home. This Brad Maple is wasting his time and money on a school of aircraft engineering in order to begin at the top, instead of the bottom. Going broke in the process, his domestic ship strips a wing. When all three find themselves eventually working side by side, under the sagacious guidance of Jake Hanso—fired from a responsible position until he can get his naturalization papers, but still loyal to the plant—events so shape themselves that all their problems are happily and patriotically resolved. Corky sees the light and becomes a flight lieutenant; Brad and Roma reach a happy reconciliation and Jake speeds up the line to avenge the death of his son in action in the Philippines.

The romantic formula, of course, is the familiar one. The operation of the giant factory, however, supplies sufficient novelty and timely interest to overbalance any suggestion of triteness with which the picture otherwise might be charged. The production scenes obviously are the real thing and not a sound-stage imitation. The rigid examination of applicants for work, the close guarding of the plant, the pride of accomplishment and the enthusiasm for voluntary work over and above the strict requirements of company rules, throw a new and inspiring light upon the spirit back of the country's effort to live up to its Government's demand for super-production such as cannot be matched by any other land. That the picture executes its mission with high success is attested by the spontaneous applause that greets its final fadeout, with flaming Jap planes hurtling into the sea under the blasting fire of the planes the audience has just seen roll off the line.

Is Virtually Self-Acting

The nature of "Wings for the Eagle" is such that one does not examine its performance too closely for the niceties of acting. Even if he did, there would be little enough found amiss. Ann Sheridan, in the role of Roma, reverts to her incisive, quick-on-the-trigger style and makes the only gal of importance in the action a self-reliant and intense young woman. Jack Carson and Dennis Morgan are evenly matched as husband and ambitious suitor, laying their accents more heavily on wholehearted and big-muscled vigor than finesse. They don't make airplanes at a tea table. George Tobias, one of the cinema's most reliable character comedians, plays Jake Hanso "straight," with no diminution of his unfailing effectiveness. His son Pete, marked for early sacrifice, is nicely done by Russell Arms. The supporting cast is uniformly competent.

On the stage this week, Billy House and his "Lunatic Revue" return a touch of "Hellzapoppin" to town. All of its principals are graduates of the Olsen and Johnson record-breaker and repeat their familiar antics with characteristically cyclonic results. The abundant Mr. House acts as master of ceremonies and chief comedian, making his entrance with typical formality through the front of the house, where the revue, like its magnified predecessor, largely spreads itself. Bobbie Jarvis teams with him uproariously. Ben Dova, most grotesque of the acrobatic comics, is in top form, particularly on top of his oscillating lamp post. The Oxford Boys, with their unbeatable vocal reproductions of all the popular bands heard on the radio, and an uncounted number of audience stooges keep the thing up to pretty high pressure, although there were evidences at yesterday's first performance that the routining could do with a bit of tinkering. The Roxyettes, augmented to 18 for a spectacular final number, are an enormous help throughout.

One of the drollest of the Terrytoon cartoon burlesques—really a succession of pictorial "blackouts"—appropriately is devoted to the timely topic of "Wacky Blackout." Its bird and animal stars are as crazy as Mr. House's revue. An especially interesting newsreel and Jo Lombardi's orchestral contributions complete a bill that is rather more exciting than usual in all departments.

Brings Romance to War Effort

who lends both humor and love interest to the Warner Brothers' production of "Wings for the Eagle," now on the screen at the Earle Theater. As her rival leading men, Dennis Morgan and Jack Carson add notably to the high spirit of the first film based on America's war effort in industry. The most sympathetic role is played by George Tobias

HEDDA HOPPER

Those Nervy Nimrods!

Hollywood, Calif., July 17.—How's this for a laugh? Walt Disney's "Bambi" (Felix Salton's story of a deer), to be premiered early in August, has started an undercover movement among the sporting world to boycott the production unless a foreword is inserted to the effect that any similarity between huntsmen (depicted only by offstage gun fire) and themselves is purely imaginary—or something!

WALT DISNEY

"Man" who enters Bambi's forest only to kill—is (oddly enough) the villain of the piece, and our mighty nimrods are in a regular tizzy! These intrepid gentry, whose idea of heaven is to crash the newsreels, draped proudly across the hapless carcass of the day's kill, are thrown into a good ol' fashioned sweat by Disney's tender and heartwarming presentation of the animal's side of the case.

Where in heck do you suppose they ever got the name "sportsmen?"

Marjorie and Jack Cummings' swimming party was a great success, except that nobody swam because guests—including the Lee Bowmans, Al Halls, Ruth Taylor (who wore a jeweled clip with her gingham dress), Andy Lawlor, Ad Schulberg, the Sam Jaffes and many more—were too busy eating hamburgers, corn on the cob and a dessert that cooled you just looking at it.

Half a watermelon was scooped out, then filled with raspberry ice cream, decorated with chocolate seeds—and boy! was it good! Each serving had a huge American Beauty rose in the middle, which we swiped as souvenirs.

That Marjorie has the best darned taste. She designs jewelry, is an interior decorator, does war work and runs a husband and two children.

Says the jewelry fad this year will be mesh bags of silver and gold, not only for evening wear, but to hang on your daytime belt.

Then to Edward Everett Horton's place, called Belly Acres (the house that laughs built). There was Car'en Miranda in a watermelon colored suit, four huge clips an the lapel of her coat. First time I've seen her without a hat. She wore her hair in a huge pompadour in front, slicked straight up the back, and held with a couple of combs. Each hair was trained to stay put—not one slipped a mooring the whole evening.

She sang, without accompaniment, and boy! how she puts over a song.

With her producer, Bill Le Baron, and Director Irving Cummings leading the applause, Charlotte Greenwood did her famous "David" song.

A direct descendant of Felix Mendelssohn played the piano beautifully.

John Payne brought his mother, who's from Roanoke, Va., and when I said the thing I missed most out here was dogwood and lilacs she invited me down next spring, because she has a house in a grove of 200 acres of dogwood trees, and, around that, a hedge of lilacs.

Ted North, wearing silly chin whiskers grown for a picture, was there with his light o' love, Mary Beth Hughes. . .

Cesar Romero, who's in "Springtime in the Rockies" with Carmen, but doesn't get to do a scene with her, said he was cheated.

Colleen Moore, just arrived from Chicago, came with George McManus and his ever-present black cigar. Colleen was wearing an ornament which looked like the tree of life, but proved to be the keys to America.

On gold stems coming from a gold vase were keys of the cities where she's shown her dollhouse, including two jeweled ones from Texas—one from the Governor, the other from the mayor of Houston. She has 40 more which go on a bracelet.

Dollhouse has made more than $800,000 for children's welfare organizations. At present it's on exhibition for the Evanston Cradle, which has a waiting list of 2000.

George McManus, fascinated with Eddie's place, asked more questions than the rest, and wanted to know how many doors the house had. Eddie's mother said she'd never counted them—but she would, and send him a detailed account!

Broadway Signboard

SUCCESS: Dan Golenpaul, producer of "Information Please," was negotiating with John D. Rockeller, jr., for the latter's appearance as a guest-expert on that program. It wasn't until yesterday that Rockefeller decided against it . . . "Tell me, was it hard for you to get Wendell Willkie for your program?" Rockefeller asked . . . "He was as reluctant as you are," said Golenpaul, "but afterward he said that the voters didn't consider him seriously as a candidate until he went on in 'Information Please.'" . . . "In that case," asked Rockefeller, "do you think that 'Information Please' might help me get on in the world?"

EDDIE DOWLING

COMPLAINT: William C. Bullitt and Harry Bridges found themselves visiting the same drawing room, while traveling from Washington to New York. When they discussed Russia, Bridges mentioned a pamphlet about the Soviet Union, containing excerpts from a speech Bullitt once made before a Senate Committee. This speech was made after Bullitt's first visit to Russia, about 20 years ago, when he had high praise for that country . . . "I read that pamphlet, and took it seriously," the union leader teased Bullitt. "Now look at the trouble into which that got me."

CHATTER: Wendell Willkie will be the principal speaker next Sunday at the Los Angeles conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People . . . The American Theater Wing's Stage Door Canteen will present a show, using the wealth of theatrical talent working there every night. Eddie Dowling will direct it . . . Eddie Garr, who plays the comedy lead in "The Merry Widow" at Carnegie Hall, fractured three ribs at the dress rehearsal. But he'll appear at tonight's premiere with his ribs taped . . . Monday night Secretary Morgenthau saw "This Is the Army." Berlin, who assigned all his morale songs to the Government, introduced Morgenthau to the members of the cast: "Boys, I want you to meet my publisher."

ART: Remo Farruggio, the noted artist, is foregoing his painting career for a while. Farruggio, who has had one-man exhibits at the Julien Levy Galleries, is going to Detroit. There he will work as a machinist, at $1.50 per hour.

LIGHTS: Billy Rose's 73-year-old father lives at the Claridge Hotel, overlooking Times Square. Billy invited him to live in a cottage at his new farm in Mount Kisco, but the senior Rose prefers to remain at the Claridge . . . "But that doesn't make sense," Rose insisted. "It's a pretty cottage and you can have anything you want there" . . . "Look, Billy," the venerable man explained. "You like bright lights, don't you? Well, so do I."

MEETING: Herbert Hoover has invited three men to his vacation camp at Bohemian Grove, near San Francisco, for a two weeks' stay. The trio consists of Roy Howard, the publisher; Clarence Buddington Kelland, publicity director of the Republican National Committee, and Westbrook Pegler, the columnist . . . They will spend the two weeks discussing Republican policies and planning how to elect Tom Dewey to the governorship of New York.

CRIME: Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, the co-authors of "Life With Father," are troubled by the frequency with which their play has been pirated in foreign countries. The most flagrant violator was an Amsterdam producer who announced that he would present the Dutch version of this famed play . . . The authors threatened suit. "You will be stopped," they warned him. And he was stopped . . . Two days before the scheduled premiere in Amsterdam the Nazis invaded Holland.

'True to the Army' Not Quite True to Tradition at the Met.

By Ernest L. Schier

Billed as an out and out "escapist" picture, "True to the Army," now enjoying a first-run release at the Metropolitan, doesn't even achieve that happy category. Intended to be a merry, musical farce to lift the minds of movie patrons off the hot weather and the war, "True to the Army" has but one or two moments of what might be classed as entertainment, and Ann Miller's amazing tap technique figures in all of them.

Judy Canova, originally a singer of hillbilly songs, is seen as Daisy Hawkins, a tight rope walker in a small-town circus. As a material witness to a murder, she is forced to leave town in a hurry with both the killers and the police after her. She arrives at what is supposed to be a typical Army training center. Here she finds her boy friend, Jerry Colonna, and his pal, Allan Jones, engaged in putting on an Army camp show. Desperate for talent, they clip her hair and compel her to stay in the camp until the show is put on. Boy, they certainly were desperate! While casting about for a female lead Allan Jones stumbles right onto—you guessed it— the colonel's daughter, who not only can dance, but is beautiful as well.

If some of the boys who are really engaged in putting on Army shows ever see this one, they're going to be mighty curious about where all that scenery came from, and how they managed to postpone all activities pertaining to the running of the Army of a nation at war!

Anyhow, a heck of a lot of trouble comes from trying to conceal Miss Canova, especially when she tries to pass as a soldier. She gets by the marksmanship test with flying colors and she just manages to squeeze by a medical examination, but when it comes to holding her own as a man, in the company of another female, she gives herself away.

The night of the performance comes and the theater is filled with gunmen who are ready to shoot her on sight when she appears. Fortunately, the police have been tipped off and enter in time to round up the bad boys.

Ann Miller, as the colonel's daughter, executes two very nice dances in her unique machine-gun-speed style. Jerry Colonna, who usually is very funny, doesn't get much of a chance to do his stuff. At least, they could have let him sing one song in his inimitable manner. Allan Jones as the stage-struck Chandler, producer of the show, sings one number nicely, but his acting still leaves something to be desired.

The supporting cast includes Clarence Kolb, William Demarest and Gordon Jones.

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Para. Playing for a Repeater

Hollywood, July 17 (INS).—The Paramount crowd are hoping that they'll "hit the jack pot" twice. By that they mean Fred Henry, former Olympic swimming champion from Cincinnati, Ohio, is another Stirling Hayden in looks. Now if his personality goes over on the screen the way Stirling's did, there'll be rejoicing on the old home lot.

SYLVIA SIDNEY

Hayden was one of Para's biggest money makers and they lost one of their greatest male bets when he left pictures to captain a boat for Uncle Sam. Now that he has married Madeleine Carroll, both of them have said au revoir to movies. Fred Henry will get his chance in a Coast Guard opus Art Arthur is penning.

Lorraine Getiman was crazy like a fox when she changed her name to Leslie Brooks and went gunning for a dramatic career. Leslie figured she had received too much night club publicity and was too identified with the Navy Blues Sextet under her real name of Lorraine Getiman. So she switched when she got a Columbia contract. The strategy seems to be working, for she's just been handed the dramatic ingenue lead in "The Commandos," with Paul Muni—and any picture Paul is in is drammer, plus. This is the movie in which Lillian Gish and Anne Lee have top femme roles and for a while Maureen O'Sullivan was rumored for the part Leslie gets.

Sylvia Sidney, who hasn't been in these parts for a long time, returns in six weeks for the Bill Thomas-Bill Pine opus, "Tornado." Bill Thomas says that when he was reading John Guedel's novel, Sylvia just seemed to step out of the pages in the girl's role. It's about an angel-face little trouble-maker name Victory, who comes to a coal mining town and practically ruins everybody's life, including leading men Dick Arlen and Chester Morris.

Chatter in Hollywood: Talk about a madhouse—I've never seen such a perfect example of one as when $20,000 worth of signatures vanished from the "Adventures of Mark Twain" set. In the collection were the signatures of Lily Langtry, P. T. Barnum, Mark Twain, John Greenleaf Whittier, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett. They were all in one book and it belonged to Roger Imhof. He had just been offered $1000 apiece for Edwin Booth's and Lawrence Barrett's autographs from a Hollywood star. Finally after a two-hour search the book was found on the prop wagon.

Monday was Ken Murray's birthday and he was hoping his baby would be born the same day:

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

One of the mysteries of the baseball season is the persistent booing of Joe DiMaggio by elements of New York fans who send up the Bronx bazoo whenever DiMag appears at the plate. It isn't strictly a Yankee Stadium habit. Boos were heard for DiMaggio on the night of the All-Star game at the Polo Grounds ten days ago.

POVICH

As far as can be learned, DiMaggio never harmed anybody or anything, with the exception to the damage he used to deal out to pitchers' records before he encountered his present baffling slump. Certainly DiMag is the least provocative of all ball players. He goes about his work with no more ostentation than a file clerk. He doesn't get into any fights. Even his batting slump hasn't induced any petulant mood. He doesn't even throw a bat in disgust.

Could be, of course, that his hecklers are the sort of morons who remember for no reason at all that DiMag is of Italian parentage and permit that to prejudice them against the Yankee star. Yet in Boston, his little brother, Dom, is a high favorite with the customers. DiMaggio's parents, with other Italian noncitizens were removed from the coast area in California, but who are Yankee Stadium fans to judge their Americanism.

DiMaggio's father was not denied American citizenship. The fact is that he knew he couldn't apply for it with any success. He couldn't pass the literacy test, because before his ball-playing sons brought him affluence, the elder DiMaggio had no opportunity to learn to read or write English. Maybe you know how it is with folks from the old country. If they don't set about to learn the new language in their formative years as Americans they are very apt to miss out. That, apparently, is what happened to DiMaggio pere.

That part of baseball fandom in New York which is booing DiMaggio is not only fickle but of short memory. A year ago, they were applauding him on his 56-game hitting streak. DiMaggio could do no wrong. Nary a boo was heard for the Yankee slugger. With the decline of his batting average this year, DiMaggio seemingly has exposed himself to the moronic natures of Stadium fans.

Dan Parker casts an interesting sidelight on DiMaggio in reporting that the Yankee slugger apparently refused the other day to meet King Peter of Jugoslavia when the boy King sat in on the Yankees' game against the Tigers. Manager Joe McCarthy and other Yankee players presented themselves to King Peter who had expressed a desire to meet DiMaggio also, but by the end of the fifth inning when the King left the park, DiMaggio had put in no appearance at the royal box.

Why not? Well, maybe the explanation will be helped by reciting a little incident that happened in Washington last year. DiMag, in the first game of a double-header, had just equaled the major league record of consecutive hitting in 52 games. As he moved across the field toward the dressing room, photographers hailed Joe. They wanted him to pose for pictures with Senator Hiram Johnson of California, who was in a nearby box. The picture was a natural, they thought, DiMaggio with the senior Senator from his home State and home district.

To the surprise of the photographers, DiMaggio refused to pose with Senator Johnson and, hearing the story we asked DiMag about it later. This is what he said:

"I guess I was a dunce for not posing with the Senator. I realize now that I was. The fact is though, that I don't like to go show-boating in front of the stands. I guess I'm just bashful. When I was a kid, I always was shy, and I guess I haven't changed much."

So spoke the fellow who had hit in 52 straight games and who insists he is bashful despite the fact that with 30,000 fans in the park and himself at bat, he is the least excited person in the stadium. Maybe shyness helps in a spot like that.

Harry Heilmann, the old Detroit slugger, who is now broadcasting baseball in Detroit, tells the story of the week. He relates it in The Sporting News, in recalling his early career in baseball.

"I signed with Portland of the Pacific Coast League for $275 a month," relates Heilmann. "Money, like the X in algebra, was an unknown quantity around our house at that particular time. So I decided when I was getting that kind of money I would practice a little frugality and surprise my ma by sending her the greater part of it. I pinched the pennies the first two months so I could send her $500. Imagine my surprise when I got a wire right back from her saying, 'Come home at once, you must be in bad company.'"

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, July 17.—Sportin' around:

The Navy has rejected the smartest, and one of the sturdiest, of all athletes—Sid Luckman. Overweight . . . Left on the cutting room floor, during the editing of the Gehrig movie, were sequences of Fiorello LaGuardia and Jim Farley, praising Lou . . . We're all for hard-fought baseball, but that vicious bean-balling contest between the Cubs and Dodgers last Wednesday should be brought to Judge Landis' attention.

CONSIDINE

The coaches of the all-Army football team may have trouble getting Tommy Harmon and Whizzer White from the Army Air Corps . . . Don Budge made only about $300 out of his victory in the U. S. professional tennis championship, but he got such a kick out of winning it (thus thumbing his nose at experts and Bobby Riggs, who said he was through) that it means more to him than some of the greater titles he won. Besides, he made nine grand on that ill-starred pro tour this past winter . . . Craig Wood, who sank a 40-footer to win the last U. S. Open, says that about the greatest putt he ever saw was Gene Sarazen's on the seventy-first hole of the 1940 Open at Cleveland. It was a downhill 20-footer, and Gene had to sink it to stay in the running. Gene did.

Here's an Objector for Conzelman

In reply to Jimmy Conzelman's speech, in which the Chicago Cardinals' coach said that men who have had a background of body-contact sports make the best soldiers, Percy Doblin, a New Yorker who saw service with the A. E. F., writes that Jimmy's generalization is all wet.

"I found that the former body-contact athletes in our company did not like the idea of fighting a ghost or the infinite and went to pieces quicker than the office clerks, the storekeepers and the other little muggs whose only chance ever was to take what came," he writes. "There was a saying on the front that you never hear the one that gets you. The little fellow, or so-called weaker guy, was fighting his heart out against an invisible shadow that hung over all our heads. It is patent that the front demands patience and a lack of the aggressive spirit, as we know it. One must be a fatalist with nerves steadied by a belief in something outside one's own prowess."

One nickel may upset the rich "breakage" racket in horse racing. A Delaware horse player named William A. Wise entered suit some time ago against the Delaware track for a nickel. It was due him, but the track kept it that day along with thousands of other stray pennies. The State Supreme Court has now upheld him, and when the track pays Wise the nickel it will tacitly acknowledge that, like all other tracks in the country, it has been baldly grabbing thousands of dollars in breakage each day since it has been open. We suspect that few fans will be as indignant and as academic as Wise was, but all horse bettors will agree with us when we demand that this money be turned over to Army and Navy Relief, USO and the Red Cross.

$10,000 Daily Taken From Bettors

Breakage runs about 1 per cent of the daily handle at every track. At New York tracks it amounts to as much as $10,000 a day. Any other licensed business would be summarily closed down by the authorities if it refused to give its customers the correct change. Racing robs its long-suffering fans of blizzards of stray pennies daily, under the hypocritical excuse that it doesn't want to bother with them.

That familiar face you see in the current newsreels showing Admiral Nimitz getting his medal is the good, honest kisser of Swede Larsen, former Navy football coach . . . Uncle Sam can buy a few more bullets, because Whirly won $43,850 in the Massachusetts Handicap. Warren Wright turns 10 per cent of the new champ's winnings into war bonds. Whirly may not be retired to stud at the end of the racing season after all. Wright may decide that his blood line, Blenheim II, needs no new progenitor, what with Blenheim II still turning out winners. All of which means that Whirly may win so much that his record will last for years.

The Philadelphia Eagles, who had first choice in the draft of college football players last winter, chose Pete Kmetovic of Stanford for the shrewd reason that he had false teeth and would escape Selective Service. So what? So Pete bought a new pair of chompers and enlisted . . . Maybe there's hope for Mike Jacobs, at that rate.

Laabs Clouts Two Homers, Browns Win

St. Louis Captures Two From Athletics; Ousts Tigers From Fourth Place in Race

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, July 17.—Stocky Chet Laabs continued his batting spree for the St. Louis Browns—socking out two more homers and driving in six runs—as the Browns beat the Athletics in both ends of a double header, 4 to 2 and 11 to 1, to oust Detroit from fourth place.

The Browns now have won eight game in a row—one from the Yankees, three from the Red Sox and four from the A's—and Laabs' mighty bat has provided the power to win nearly all of them.

In the last seven days he has walloped six homers and driven in 22 runs. He now has clouted 17 homers and batted in 64 runs compared to his 15 round trippers and 58 R.B.I. for the entire 1941 campaign.

Herman Besse held the Browns in check in the opener except for a four-run uprising in the sixth, climaked by Laabs' four-bagger with Mike Chartak on base. Steve Sundra was nicked for 11 hits, but was effective in the pinches.

Laabs' second roundtripper of the day and his fifth in the four-game series came in the first inning of the nightcap, again with Chartak on base. In the fifth he tripled in two more runs. Stan Ferns blanked the A's until the ninth when Buddy Blair's single drove in Dee Miles.

Spud Chandler Beats Indians For Yanks, 8-1

By the Associated Press

New York, July 17.—The New York Yankees looking like world champions again, crushed the Cleveland Indians today, 8 to 1, with Spud Chandler pitching six-hit ball and Phil Rizzuto and Red Rolfe each contributing a home run and a triple to the Yanks' sixth straight triumph.

To all intents and purposes the game was decided in the first inning when Rizzuto smashed his homer off Lefty Al Smith with the bases loaded. It was his second of the season and sailed high into the left-field stands.

But much happened afterward to keep the customers engrossed. in the second inning Rolfe drove in a run with a triple and in the fourth he collected his third home run in five days, with one on.

The Yankees supported Chandler with four double plays, bringing their total to 119 for 86 games. Joe DiMaggio extended his hitting streak to 14 games with a single off Joe Heving in the seventh. And there were a couple of red hot arguments between players and umpires.

Umpire Rules It a Fly

One of these came in the Indians' half of the second inning when Ray Mack hit a liner to Phil Rizzuto with Les Fleming on second base. Rizzuto trapped the ball and started a rundown of Fleming between second and third. After this was completed the umpire ruled it had been an infield fly, making Mack automatically out and giving the Yanks one of their double plays in spite of a storm of protests by Cleveland players.

Then in the fifth inning Roy Weatherly came to the plate to pinch hit for Smith with two on and none out. Umpire Joe Rue refused to let him bat and there was another puzzling dispute with players of both sides clustered around the plate. Rue explained that Weatherly had been banished from the field during the debate in the second inning and the stumpy center fielder finally tossed his bat in the air and stalked from the diamond. Al Milnar replaced him and fanned.

Mrs. Henderson, Mrs. Kerr Victors In Annual Play Over Two Courses

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The Washington Post Cup tournament for the District Women's Golf Association members once again produced personal scoring records for two players yesterday—Mrs. David H. Henderson of Congressional, the new Class A champion, and Mrs. W. F. Kerr of Prince Georges, the proud possessor of the Class B Cup.

Mrs. Henderson, who is playing her third year of tournament golf in the District after battling the sand greens of Montana for the first seven years of her golfing career, posted her all-time low score, an 85 for the steaming Columbia course, and deducted nine handicap strokes for a net 76, the best net total in Class A by two strokes.

Mrs. Kerr continued the Prince Georges Club monopoly on the Class B cups by breaking 95 for the first time since first swinging a club, shooting a 94, to be exact, at Kenwood and subtracting 21 handicap strokes for a net 73; the winner by the margin of a single shot in the third annual competition for the Class B Cup, for those with handicaps of 19 and over. Mrs. C. B. Hartman, a clubmate, who finished seventh, won the previous Star and C. B. S. Class B affairs.

Heat a Hazard

The excessive heat was hazard in itself and although there were only 11 withdrawals from the combined field of 157 players, a fine showing, most of the players had just two intentions when they straggled off the eighteenth green, a cooling drink and a cold shower. Mrs. Henderson, the tenth different winner of the Class A Cup in its 10-year history, was one of those who marely made it. The Congressional representative thought for a while on the back nine she would have to withdraw due to the heat and sun but her fine score encouraged her to finish.

District and Maryland State champion Mrs. Walter R. Stokes was one of 44 at the two clubs who failed to turn in a card, most of them complained of heat inter-

Much-Jinxed Camden Track Opens Today

Elaborate New Plant Beats Down Obstacles, Expects 30,000 Fans

By Sid Feder

Associated Press Sports Writer

Camden, N. J., July 17.—On the theory that anything that happens now must be for the better, simply because it can't get any worse, the brand new Garden City Track laid in a fresh supply of aspirin today and was all set to bow in tomorrow with Jersey's first horse racing in half a century.

Just about everything but an earthquake has happened to this beautiful million-and-a-half dollar brick and wood plant on the edge of the New Jersey farmlands. Injunctions were threatened, priorities haunted it, transportation isn't only short it's virtually nonexistent. And some local opposition particularly a descriptively titled organization tagged "the Association for the Prevention of a Race Track in Camden County," has been in its hair for weeks.

Just to help matters, there are no communications facilities on the grounds. (This dispatch would probably be relayed to the outside world by dog-sled, if there was any snow around).

Yet, in spite of all that, Eugene Mori, an automobile salesman from nearby Vineland, and his associates are ready to send the 49-day meeting, lasting until September 12, to the post at 2:30 p. m. (E. W. T.) tomorrow. The opening card is headed by the $5000-added Camden Handicap, which drew a field of 16 better-than-bad sprinters, headed by G. C. Greer's flashy Cape Cod.

The mere fact that the track, 7 miles from Philadelphia, is opening at all is a major accomplishment. What's more remarkable, is that Mori expects a crowd of over 30,000 to get there on conveyances from pogo sticks right up the list for tomorrow's card. And he's looking for a mutuel handle of more than half a million dollars.

Cards Swamp Phils, 10 to 1; Take Series

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, July 17.—Sharpening up their knives for the crucial Brooklyn series starting tomorrow, the St. Louis Cardinals smeared the lowly Philadelphia Phils, 10 to 1, today to take the series three games to one.

Howard Krist, making his first start of the season for the Redbirds, held the Phils to five well scattered hits while his teammates were pounding Si Johnson and Frank Hoerst for 13 hits. It was Krist's sixteenth victory against two defeats in the last two seasons.

Enos Slaughter led the Cardinal attack with a single, a double and a triple, driving in two runs. Marty Marion was the only member of the starting line-up who failed to get a hit.

11,000 See Tigers Bow To Newsom

8th Inning Spree Ruins Newhouser's Fine Effort; Both Hurlers Give 4 Hits

By Shirley Povich

Post Staff Writer

Twilight ball was a smashing success at Griffith Stadium last night—for the Nats. For the Detroit Tigers it was something else again—a galling 3-0 shutout at the hands of their erstwhile pal, Louie Newsom.

Before a whooping crowd of 11,000 fans, in the park at the new-fangled starting hour of 7 p. m., the Nats beat back the threat of a humiliating no-hit defeat by Harold Newhouser of the Tigers, and scored all of the game's runs in the eighth inning.

Five thousand women fans were in the throng, after a rush job on the dinner dishes, if at all. In a viva voce vote, requested by the Griffith Stadium management after the fifth inning, the customers loudly proclaimed their preference for baseball at the twilight hour.

President Clark Griffith of the Nats, announced after the game that all of the club's home games in the future when not scheduled at night or on Sundays, would be played at twilight.

Buck Impressive

Big Newsome turned in a four-hit job to gain his second shut-out victory over the Tigers this season and extend the Nats' winning streak to four straight, but until the eighth inning he was being outpitched by the left-handed Newhouser.

There were visions of a no-hit game by Newhouser as he moved through the first six innings and had one out in the seventh without permitting any sort of a hit. Johnny Sullivan jolted the no-hit dreams of the Tiger southpaw by beating out a bunt in the seventh. Newsome, allowed only four hits, and two of those were bunts.

It was a bunt by George Case, in the eighth, the Nats' second hit of the game, that put the winning run in motion. Two other runs scored by the Nats in the inning were gift affairs when Catcher Birdie Tebbetts and First Baseman Rudy York contributed grievous errors.

Case pushed his bunt neatly past Newhouser to open the eighth and, fittingly for the league's leading base stealer, he stole second before anybody was out. Stan Spence rapped a single into left field and Case sprinted home a half step ahead of McCosky's throw.

Vernon Walked

Newhouser was in further trouble when he walked Vernon with none as yet out, but Estalella popped up. Repass, however, lined a single over Bloodworth's head, and Spence got a late start on a dash to the plate in fear the ball would be caught. Harris' throw from right field beat Spence to the plate, but the ball skipped through Tebbetts for an error and the runner scored. A bit later after Evans walked to fill the bases, Sullivan grounded to Newhouser who attempted to start a double play with a throw to the plate, forcing Vernon. York, however, dropped Tebbetts' relay of the ball, and Repass continued home from second with the third run of the night.

The first four innings of the ball game were played by daylight, with

Some Cash Figures In Transaction for New Third-Sacker

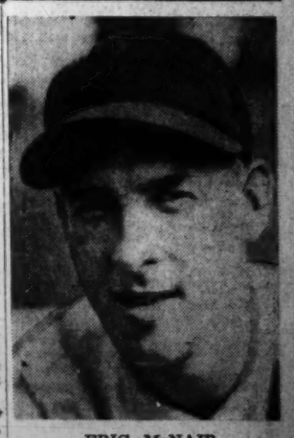
The Nats acquired Infielder Eric McNair from the Detroit Tigers last night in a deal that involved the sale of Pitcher Jack Wilson to the Detroit Club.

The exchange of the two players was announced at the end of the twilight game at the Stadium. Waivers had been obtained on the players by their respective clubs, thus observing the rule that forbids trades after June 15, except on waivers.

In effect, the Nats bought McNair while the Tigers bought Wilson. It was not an even swap. President Clark Griffith stated the Tigers paid "a bit more, but not much."

The 32-year-old McNair, who has been a bench-warmer for the Tigers, will play third base for the Nats, Manager Bucky Harris announced. He has seen service this year chiefly as a pinch hitter, batting .167 in 24 games. McNair previously played shortstop, second base and third base for the Athletics, Red Sox, and White Sox.

He entered the big leagues in 1929. He batted .324 for the White Sox in 1939, but has a lifetime average of .277 in the majors.



ERIC McNAIR

Wilson, who has one victory to his credit and four defeats charged against him this season, was obtained from the Nats last winter from the Boston Red Sox, in the deal that involved Ken Chase and Stan Spence. He is 30 years old.

Glitter Girl Captures Hagerstown Purse by Three Lengths

Pandoramint Second to $12.30-Shot

Double Pays $63 As Feeling High, June Pennant Win; Westing Takes 3d

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Hagerstown, Md., July 17.—Taking command at the first jump, J. B. Royston's Glitter Girl led all the way to win the Cumberland Purse, featuring the Friday program. Jockey George Acosta brought the daughter of Lucullite and Humbug to the wire three lengths in advance of S. J. Flammia's Pandoramint. A neck farther back, came Miss Jayne Waugh's Last Bet to be third in the field of eight operating over the Mason-Dixon course of 120 feet less than 5 furlongs.

With Mrs. G. O. Russell's dull-running Weatherite installed the favorite, backers of Glitter Girl collected $12.30 for each deuce investment. The winning filly turned in a time of 1:04, creditable for the sprint route.

Only four horses in the field were in contending positions. Pandoramint was always closest to the pace while Last Bet rallied to shunt Don Dash into fourth position in the closing stages.

The success of the meeting here was reflected today when it was announced that mutuel employes would be paid a minimum of $10 daily. General Manager Harold Bester made the announcement after conferring with Gov. Herbert O'Conor, Frank Small, chairman of the racing commission, and Donald Hay, mutuel manager.

Selections at Hagerstown

Dear Al:

Trainer-Owner Everett Brining has been notified that he will be given a hearing by the Maryland Racing Commission in the stimulation case involving the horse Marandan, a winner here on opening day. The hearing has been set for 10 a. m. Tuesday in Baltimore. Eddie Mein has been appointed trainer of the Nicodemus horse, formerly conditioned by Brining. The plater Sir Time, which pulled up during the running of a race on the Thursday program has been banned from further racing by the stewards. Walter Haight, the colt, is a doubtful starter today but will be hard to beat if sent postward. Condition books for the Cumberland meeting are being distributed. Jockeys Buddy Root, Al Bocson and Willie Balzaretti are battling it out for the riding championship of the meeting. K. D. Kolseth and Claude Feltner are the top trainers going into the final day of the session. Remember, no racing Monday and Tuesday. Bel Air opens on Wednesday. Jockey Danny Scocca is improving daily at the Delaware Hospital in Wilmington, Del. He may leave the hospital in two weeks. Maurice Oliver, who claims he is the only man at the track to be immune from hot-foots, is reported to be wearing asbestos shoes. Gifford Beavins of the Jones camera force, has joined Uncle Sam's doughboys. He reports July 30 at Fort Dix. He says Hitler will lose and it won't be a photo finish, either. Galt Davis is sending his horses to Cumberland and will skip Bel Air. Yankee Lad will be given some treatments before racing again. Perry, who didn't discover the North Pole, went about his janitor duties yesterday in a new Palm Beach suit with the trimmings. The track photographer had to use a flash bulb to take his picture in a bright sun. If the rain stays away today, Hagerstown will have a record of only one off track. P. H. Faulconer, owner of Roman Boy and other horses, was a visitor yesterday. Excellent closing day card today. See you on the rail.—BILL.

First race—AMPERAGE is the best of those gathered for the day's opener. Needs only the right ride. HAPPY SLAV has stretch punch and is a threat. ROUGH AMOS to take care of the others.

Second race—BILL BLEIWEISS may steal a lead on this gang and stay on top to the finish. I'm going to string along with this veteran. BEANS and CHILLEE VALLEE begin to figure in this company, SOUGHT AFTER may come along in time to be a factor.

Third race—BUCKLE DOWN has done about everything asked of late and is the natural choice in this company. The entry of DOCTOR POSEY and SWEETIE FACE is formidable, LITTLE HOOPS is a possibility.

Fourth race—CROISSANT turned in a good race last out and appears capable of winning over this field. EYE OPENER'S last was promising and this one will be a keen factor today. MUD DOBBER to take care of the others.

Fifth race—SEVENTH SAGE and EL JELIS are a tight fit in this field. I prefer them in the order named. NYLEVE is a lot better than that last and could awaken with a bang.

Sixth race—STRUMMING was something of a champion at Charles Town and will be hard to whip in this company. STREAMER has won two in a row and belongs close. HOT MAN to take care of the show end.

Seventh race — GROUCHER'S BOY is suited by the marathon distance of this event and I'm going to string along. SOME GROUCHER will be right there and deserves consideration. Feather weight gives REIGN SUPREME a chance.

Eighth race—BIG GAY likes the route and the company seems to suit. I'm going to string along. PURPLE DAWN has front-running ability and will have to be caught. DOMINAL and GROUCHY will be right there if taken off the reserve list.

Best bet—SEVENTH SAGE.

Don Leavens Beats Channing in M.A. Net

Round of Four Completed After Bitter 6-4, 6-3 Decision at Columbia

By Jack Munhall

Cotton-headed Don Leavens yesterday became the fourth singles semi-finalist in the Middle Atlantic tennis championships at Columbia as a combination of hair-line decisions on close shots and the humid heat took the starch out of jolly Charley Channing's best performance in a long time.

Channing gave his fellow United States ensign a surprisingly good fight of it before going down to an exciting 6—4, 6—3 defeat which left the semifinal round filled with the four top favorites.

Half an hour later Channing and Leavens again faced each other across the nets and the result was the same. Leavens and Davie Johnsen had little trouble with Channing and Frank Thompson and gained the doubles finals, 6—1, 6—4.

Also moving into the doubles title round were Defending Champions Barney Welsh and Hugh Lynch, who beat down stubborn opposition from the youngsters Bobby Bensinger and Doyle Royal. The scores were 6—4, 6—3.

Singles semifinals are on today's card. Leavens renews his hot rivalry with Johnsen at 4:45, while Welsh tackles Dick Murphy at 6:15. Championship matches in singles and doubles will be held tomorrow.

The Channing-Leavens match reached its climax in the tenth game of the first set after Channing had wasted a promising early lead of 2—0 and 30—0.

Trailing, 4—5, Channing hopped off to a 40—15 lead in the tenth and then allowed Leavens to pull up to deuce. Again the former University of Virginia star was within a point of a deuced set when he took the add on a Leavens error. But on the succeeding crucial point Leavens whacked a deep drive to the sidelines which appeared to be out by several inches but which Channing ruled good. Thus reprieved, Leavens closed out the game, the set and in doing so probably won the match.

After that Channing seemed to lose heart and certainly he lost his pep in the extreme heat as Leavens never permitted him to lead in the second set. At that, though Leavens, who at times appears to have the ball on a string, so accurate is he at hitting the lines, needed the help of several such heart-breaking close points to retain the initiative.

Channing displayed further signs of weariness in the doubles as his frequent errors made victory easy for Leavens and Johnsen. Leavens, cat-like at the net with his volleys, was easily the best player on the court, in a match decided by successive bitter close-hand shooting.

Welsh and Lynch got more competition than they bargained for from Bensinger and Royal, who overcame a 1—3 deficit to take a 4—3 lead and force the champions to really open up. When the heat was on, however, they wilted and Lynch and Welsh broke through Bensinger in the eighth and swept through the ninth and tenth games with ease.

Dodgers Take Finale, 10-5, From Chicubs

By International News Service

Chicago, July 17.—The Brooklyn Dodgers won the final game of the series with the Chicago Cubs today by a score of 10 to 5, collecting 15 hits from three pitchers.

Claude Passeau, who was knocked out of the box in the start of the series on Wednesday, suffered a similar experience today. After Bill Nicholson's two-run homer in the third inning tied the game, the Dodgers went to work on Passeau in the fifth with doubles by Reiser and Herman, singles by Riggs and Sullivan, a walk and Foxx's error sending in five runs. Tot Pressnell was touched for three more unneeded runs in the seventh.

Schoolboy Rowe turned in his first National League victory, although he had to be relieved by Eddie Head in the eighth.

Browns, With Eight In Row, Meet Nats At Stadium Today

The St. Louis Browns, hottest club in the American League with an eight-game winning streak, move into Griffith Stadium today for a three-game series, ending with a double-header tomorrow.

Alex Carrasquel, tall Venezuelan, who won in his last appearance, has been assigned the job of stopping the sensational Brownies whose Chet Laabs has hit six home runs in the last seven days.

The Browns will pitch Dennis Galehouse, master of the slider pitch, who shut out the Red Sox, 1-0, in his last job.

Maryland Open Entries Close

Entries for the Maryland Open Championship close today, either with Al Houghton, pro at the host Prince Georges Club, or with the State Golf Association offices at 16 McClellan Place, Baltimore. The tournament will be played over the 36-hole route Tuesday.

The entrance fee for amateurs is $3 and pros $5 with amateur prizes and the pro purse of some $250 to be paid in War Savings Bonds.

Terp Lacrosse Team Faces Lions Today

Maryland's varsity lacrosse team makes its first summer appearance this afternoon at 2:30 against the Nittany Lions of Penn State in Byrd Stadium at College Park.

Hoyas, Terps In Diamond Tests Today

Georgetown and Maryland continue their summer baseball schedules today. The Hoyas, 4-3 victors over Fort Myer in their opener Wednesday, face a stiffer test in Camp Lee at 3 p. m. at the Hilltop, while Maryland plays Fort Myer at College Park. Tomorrow Georgetown will play the Marines at Quantico.

Bill McGurk, undefeated as a freshman last spring, will be Georgetown's starting pitcher against Camp Lee. McGurk, who has won five straight college games, will be opposed by Mike Nowak, big righthander and the property of the St. Louis Cardinals. Camp Lee is one of the strongest of all the service nines and holds a decision over Bobby Feller's Norfolk Naval Training Station team.

Maryland, which dropped a 10-8 verdict to the local FBI team in its summer inaugural, will be seeking to make another blotch on Myer's fine record. The soldiers, coached by "Bozie" Berger, former Cleveland and Chicago White Sox infielder, won seven straight before Georgetown halted them.

Hemsley Gets Release From Cincinnati

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, July 17.—The Cincinnati Reds tonight gave Catcher Ralston Burdett Hemsley his unconditional release and recalled Al Lakeman, Cincinnati boy, from Syracuse of the International League.

Hemsley, purchased last December from the Cleveland Indians of the American League, has batted .113 for 115 turns with the stick and his 13 hits have driven in 8 runs.

Hemsley had been counted on to fill the big shoes of Ernie Lombardi who was sold to the Boston Braves. But Hemsley did two-thirds of his play this season in the first month, after which he was replaced by Rookie Ray Lamanno, currently topping Redleg batters with .289. Recently Rollie was used mostly as alternating backstop in double-headers.

Lakeman, who was with the Reds at Tampa last spring, will be called to duty immediately.

'Rube' Marquard Joins Coast Guard Reserves

Richard W. (Rube) Marquard, who made pitching history with the New York Giants three decades ago, has been commissioned a lieutenant, junior grade, in the Coast Guard Reserve, the Navy disclosed yesterday.

Marquard, who won 19 straight games for the Giants in 1912, probably will be assigned to the Coast Guard Station at Curtis Bay, Md.

Brewers Beat Market, Gain Tie for Lead

The Heurich Brewers, perennial Post-Industrial League champions, pulled into a first-place tie with Center Market yesterday in a torrid second-half clash on the Ellipse. Pat Fenlon's sharp single in the ninth brought Jerry Zanelotti home with the winning run.

Before the big run came home, however, the Brewers had considerable help from their rivals. Wrenn sacrificed Zanelotti, who had singled, to second and a wild throw to second by Pitcher Watt advanced the runner another base.

Johnny Murnane, right-hand fireballer, was credited with a two-hit effort as the Brewers took their fifth triumph in six games. He struck out six, but walked a total of 10 to account for most of his trouble.

Giants Batter Buc Hurlers, Win by 11-2

By International News Service

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 17.—The Giants cracked down on the Pirates today with a 20-hit barrage, thoroughly shellacking three Buc hurlers and winning easily, 11 to 2, behind the five-hit hurling of Hal Schumacher, who retired after eight innings because of the heat.

Johnny Lanning, Aldon Wilkie and Luke Hamlin all suffered at the hands of the New Yorkers, with Billy Jurges driving in four runs on four hits, including a first-inning home run. Bartell, Mize and Danning each collected three hits.

The Giants sewed up the contest with six runs in the fifth inning.

Fletcher's triple and Elliott's long fly gave the Pirates their first run in the eighth inning and Babe Phelps followed with his fifth homer of the season.

Eugene (Huck) Geary, Pirate Rookie shortstop, made his major league debut and got on base twice, once on a walk and by hitting a single in the ninth inning.

New Champs Crowned In Post Cup Golf

ference.

Low gross in Class A went to Kenwood's remarkably consistent shotmaker, Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, who hit her shots in championship style, putted in streaks, some good and some bad, and finished with an 83. It was the fifth time Mrs. Meckley had won gross honors in the Class A competition of the Post Cup, this time from nines of 44 and 39 for 83.

Madeline Bast of Manor and Mrs. Marty Gordon, of Indian Spring, settled low gross honors in Class B in sociable style. They tied with 94's each, flipped a coin and Miss Bast took low gross on the toss and Mrs. Gordon third low net. Miss Bast put together eight consecutive fives on the first nine and finished with a six for a 46, and came back in 48 for a 94. Mrs. Gordon, who in the last six weeks has reduced her handicap from 36 to 19, paired 47's for a 99 and deducted 19 handicap strokes for a net 75, third low net.

Mrs. Henderson snapped a temporary three-way deadlock for the cup in Class A when she finished late and posted her winning 76. At that time Mrs. H. W. Sharpe, Kenwood, whose 90—12, 78, matched her score for the past two years in The Post Cup, was tied with Mrs. F. L. Williams, Argyle, making her debut in Class A after winning gross honors in two other newspaper tournaments in Class B and Mrs. W. Marion Falls, of the host club. Mrs. Williams had 47—49, 96—19, 78, and Mrs. Falls, with her third lowest competitive score, was deadlocked with 44—45, 89—11, 78. The matching cards method was used to break the tie or second through fourth low net and they finished Mrs. Williams, Sharpe and Falls.

The Post presented $25 War Savings Bonds to the Class A and B net winners, while they take the Post cups to their home clubs for a year. The association awarded war stamps and miscellaneous prizes to the other prize winners.

Mrs. P. W. Rutledge, assistant tournament chairman, was forced to use the matching cards system to break a four way deadlock for net 79s in Class A for the final net prizes. Mrs. Charles Voorhees, Congressional, with 46, 50—96—17—79, won fifth and Mrs. George H. Bailey, jr., Washington Muncaster Cup champion, sixth net with 42, 45—87—8—79. That left Mrs. John W. Godfrey, who brought the winner home, and Mrs. Norman Frost, Columbia, barely out of the prize list. Mrs. Godfrey had 88—9—79, and Mrs. Frost, playing in her first tournament for several years, 91—12—79.

At Kenwood Mrs. L. M. Cuvillier of Indian Spring, was second low net winner with a 104-30, 74, missing a tie by only one stroke. With gross going to Miss Bast and third low net to Mrs. Gordon that left Mrs. Samuel Hauser of Washington, fourth with 111 strokes and the maximum handicap of 36 for a net 75. Mrs. Bessie Taylor, Prince Georges, was fifth low net with 98-22,76, Mrs. T. P. Bank, Washington, next with 98-22, 76, including an out nine of 46. Mrs. Hartman seventh with 98-22,76 and Mrs. W. W. Southworth, Washington, the last prize winner with 101-24, 77 as a clubmate, Mrs. A. Carragher, lost in the draw with 104-27, 77.

Only six players broke 100 in Class B and in Class A only Mrs. Meckley, Mrs. Henderson, Mrs. Falls, Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Godfrey, Mrs. Leo Walper, and Mrs. T. O. Brandon were under 90.

The secret of Mrs. Henderson's low round was posting par threes on all four of the difficult one-shoters at Columbia. The winner had just one bad hole, the fourteenth where she took a seven. Mrs. Kerr, a long-hitter among the Class B players simply said she was consistent all the way around, and could have saved several shots here and there.

Hagen Out of Line-up as Ryder Cup Play Starts

By the Associated Press

Detroit, July 17.—Walter Hagen withdrew from competition tonight in the showdown Ryder Cup Charity Golf series by omitting his name from the foursome pairings of his challengers for the start tomorrow of the two-day match with Craig Wood's cuppers over the long and relatively difficult Oakland Hills course.

Hagen, whose previous efforts have been devoted to the cup squad, nominated Lawson Little and Lighthorse Harry Cooper as his top challenger twosome and they were matched with Wood's veteran combination of former Texans Ben Hogan and Jimmy Demaret.

The other pairings are: Byron Nelson—Ed Dudley (cuppers) vs. Henry Picard—Sam Byrd; Gene Sarazen—Lloyd Mangrum (cuppers) vs. Clayton Heafner—Sergt. Jim Turness; Wood—Sergt. Vic Ghezzi (cuppers) vs. Ralph Guldahl—Dick Metz; Norton Smith—Jug McSpaden (cuppers) vs. Jimmy Thomson—Al Watrous.

Hagen, who had intended to play at least 18 holes, explained he had missed practice because of trips to Rochester, N. Y., where his father, William, is ill. The Haig also left young Melvin (Chick) Harbert off the foursome list but said he would play in Sunday's singles competition in place of Watrous, home pro.

Singles pairings will be announced tomorrow. All matches are 36 holes.

In foursome pairings both captains led with strength. Hogan and Demaret, moving up from the challengers, went unbeaten through two previous tests in the domestic series. Little, who teamed with Mangrum for the Inverness Invitational title at Toledo, has a good partner in Cooper who won his match here two years ago.

Picard and Byrd, runners-up at Toledo, apparently are well matched with Nelson and Dudley, the latter a last-minute replacement for Sam Snead, who was unable to arrange leave from the Navy. In the singles there may be real line-up manipulations, depending, of course, on the relative status of the squads in foursome play.

The third renewal of the series is expected to yield $35,000 for the Red Cross. More than $30,000 was raised when the cuppers beat Sarazen's challengers in 1940 and lost to Bobby Jones' squad last year.

In conjunction with tomorrow's play, Fred Corcoran, P. G. A. tournament manager, said the association's advisory committee would meet to plan a possible war relief golf tour by a squad of the Nation's top pros in September.

In common with the national trend, Washington life insurance sales slumped to $4,366,000 in June, off 25 per cent as compared with the same month last year.

Policy sales here in the first six months totaled $32,540,000, or 3 per cent less than in the same 1941 period, according to the Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau of Hartford, Conn.

Nationally, the same source reported that life insurance sales were $463,325,000 in June, or 22 per cent down. The six-month total of $3,472,247,000 was 4 per cent improved over the corresponding period last year.

Maryland sales in June were $8,498,000, off 9 per cent and for the first six months the volume of $58,206,000, was 11 per cent improved over last year.

Virginia sales in June showed a 36 per cent nosedive at $6,403,000, while the six-month aggregate of $51,423,000 was only 1 per cent less than last year's.

The FHA committee is made up of representatives of 30 States and its purpose is to study and advise the league on developments pertaining to the National Housing Act.

Jordan Piano to Move

After operating since 1913 on the corner of Thirteenth and G Streets Northwest, the Arthur Jordan Piano Co. will move to a new location at 1013-1015 Seventh Street Northwest, where they will continue business combined with the Piano Shop now occupying the latter address. The merger will take place about August 1.

Recent curtailments in the manufacture of goods made this step advisable, Jordan officials said yesterday.

Equitable Life Assurance Society

A new all-time high of insurance in force was reached June 30 by the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, the present total of $7,803,595,000, representing an increase of $196,282,000 since the first of the year, Thomas I. Parkinson, president, announced yesterday.

Assets of the society reached a new peak of $2,824,561,646 on June 30, an increase of $64,000,000 since January 1. Purchases of U. S. Government bonds during the six months totaled $279,490,215.

Total payments to policyholders and beneficiaries amounted to $108,300,000 in the first half of the year.

Among the unusual claim payments during the half-year were those for $44,000 to the families of 22 workers at the Burlington Ordnance Plant, Burlington, Iowa, who were killed in an explosion at the plant. The explosion occurred just after the installation of the group contract and before there was even time for delivery of the individual certificates.

June Sales Off 2% In Independent Stores

The Commerce Department estimated yesterday that sales of independent retail stores in June were 2 per cent less than in May and 1 per cent less than in June of last year.

The decline from May was described as seasonal, however, and the decrease compared with a year ago was attributed almost exclusively to rationing or scarcity in certain lines, including filling stations, automobile dealers, furniture stores and building materials dealers.

Sales of food, apparel and other general consumer merchandise were from about 9 to 24 per cent higher this June than a year ago.

Bridge Traffic Off 25%

New York, July 17 (AP).—Traffic on the five bridges operated by Tri-Borough Port Authority declined 25 per cent in the first six months of 1942 from the same period a year ago, the semiannual statement of the authority disclosed today. In May and June, there was a decline of 40 per cent from the volume handled in those months in 1941.

SEC Sets Hearing On Firm's Plan for 'Victory Series'

Philadelphia, July 17 (AP).—In one of the first cases of its kind in wartime, the Securities and Exchange Commission directed a hearing to determine whether the terms "Victory Series" of securities as used by an investment company in a registration statement is misleading.

Sponsor of the series is the National Securities and Research Corporation of New York City, which proposed a $2,827,380 share issue to finance acquisition of stocks and bonds in a "National Securities Series," including the "Victory Series."

The SEC in its order for the hearing July 27 said it had "had reasonable cause to believe" that the registration statement filed under the Securities Act of 1933 "includes untrue statements of material facts and omits to state material facts . . ."

In its prospectus the investment firm under the heading "Investment Objectives," stated that the "Victory Series" was an investment "in a diversified group of domestic and foreign securities, Government obligations, corporate bonds, preferred stocks and common stocks, which may be expected to produce a reasonable income and benefit especially as the result of victory by the United Nations."

Other series listed include bond, low-priced bond, preferred stock, income and low-priced common stock.

Steel Shares Lead General Stock Retreat; Wage Boost Receives Belated Recognition

New York, July 17.—Inflation or no inflation, the stock market lost its rising stamina today and leaders dipped fractions to more than a point. In addition to the usual trimming of accounts for weekend protection, some selling was based on indications the administration would ask for stiffer corporation tax rates and possibly urge wage-price legislation to prevent the threat of soaring living costs, many potential buyers also were restrained by President gloomy war news from Russia.

The list displayed considerable hesitancy at the start. Steels developed softness after midday and an assortment of blue chips declined appreciably. There were scattered favorites among rails, farm implements, utilities and specialties, but these were too few to turn the trend.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .4 of a point at 36.9, largest drop since June 22. Offerings never were of the urgent kind and transfers for the full proceedings totaled 282,770, compared with 265,300 the day before.

Steels seemingly were depressed by belated implications of the pay boost granted "little steel" workers. Youngstown Sheet showed independent heaviness, falling 1¾ points in the wake of a 50-cent dividend declaration against 75 cents paid in the two preceding quarters.

Prominent backsliders included U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, Goodyear, U. S. Rubber, Anaconda, American Can, Westinghouse, du Pont, Union Carbide, Allied Chemical, U. S. Gypsum, Santa Fe, Sears Roebuck, International Harvester, Texas Co. and Standard Oil (N. J.).

Among better actors were White Rock and Oliver Farm which edged into new high grounds for the year. Holding modest advances were New York Central, Southern Railway, Atlantic Coast Line, Crane Co., Western Union, Postal Telegraph preferred, North American and Owens-Illinois.

Bonds inclined to retreat. Weakness of wheat and cotton futures helped put brakes on securities. At Chicago wheat was off 1⅜ to 1⅞ cents a bushel but corn steadied to finish off ⅛ to up as much. Hogs jumped 15 to 25 cents to new 16-year tops. Cotton lost $1.15 to $1.30 a bale.

In the Curb Todd Shipyards backed down 4 points on a few trades while Southern New England Telephone and Curtis Patent Fire Arms gained more than 3 each, also on restricted turnovers. The aggregate here was 55,780 shares versus 87,125 Thursday.

Newsprint Use Reported 4.4% Down in Period

Montreal, July 17 (Canadian Press.—The Newsprint Association of Canada reported today total apparent newsprint consumption of all United States publishers in June was 266,393 tons or 26,886 tons less than in the comparable month of 1941.

The cumulative decrease for the first six months of 1942, compared with a year ago, was set at 4.4 per cent.

The association estimated newsprint stocks of U. S. publishers had increased 19,428 tons in June to 633,608 tons, at the end of the month. At the end of June, 1941, the total was 400,774 tons and a year earlier 391,658 tons.

Shipments from Canada during the first half of 1942 furnished 77 per cent of the U. S. supply, the report said, compared with 68 per cent in the first half of 1941. U. S. mills shipped 24 per cent and Newfoundland's share was unchanged at 5 per cent.

Bargain Offers in Base Period Exempt From Price Ceiling

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

The Office of Price Administration yesterday smoothed out a rough spot in the general price ceiling by issuing an order permitting storekeepers, wholesalers and manufacturers who had abnormally low prices throughout March, the base period, to raise them in certain cases.

Under the new order any seller whose maximum price for a commodity is based on a special deal or other temporary price reduction may raise his maximum to the highest price he obtained during the 30 days immediately preceding the reduction.

A retailers whose temporary reduction was not based on a special deal provided by his supplier may still apply to OPA for a price increase if his ceiling price is abnormally slow in relation to his competitors and causes substantial hardship.

All sellers who take advantage of the new order must report their action to OPA within 10 days, proving that the adjustment comes under this authority.

Price Administrator Leon Henderson said the order is a "logical step in permitting certain sellers whose prices are obviously below those of their competitors and are inevitably causing hardship to make immediate adjustments first and then report their action to us for review. This step holds the general level of prices unchanged by providing quick relief for out-of-line cases."

To illustrate the type of special deals affected, the OPA cited the case of a soap manufacturers who, as a promotional campaign in February and March, supplied retailers four cakes for the price of three, the retailer selling them at a 1-cent sale. If the manufacturer can show that this offer was temporary and not of the last month, than 123 days he can set his price back to the maximum in effect before February 1. The retailer must sell all soap received under the special deal at the old price, but when that is gone he may return to the highest price he charged in the 30 days prior to the sale.

Little Business Cautioned on Relief Hopes

By the Associated Press

Chairman Lou E. Holland of the Smaller War Plants Corporation reminded little businessmen yesterday that this new agency was not a relief agency and could not supply "miraculous balm that will heal all the wounds" resulting from the war program.

"There are bound to be casualties," Holland declared, in a statement. "But this is not saying that we are not fully sympathetic to the problems and to the plight of small business.

"We are; and we believe we shall find ways to spread war work more extensively into the field of small business. I know, from my own experience, that there are a lot of small firms around the country which are thoroughly capable of doing many jobs that need to be done."

The corporation was set up by Congress with a $150,000,000 revolving fund to promote conversion of small plants to war work and assist them in obtaining Government contracts.

Tool Order Amended

Manufacturers of new machine tools were authorized to enter into contracts and make deliveries at abbve-ceiling prices while awaiting rulings from the Office of Price Administration on petitions filed for price increases.

The amendment to the machine-tool price order was intended, OPA said, to "eliminate possible delays in entering into the production of critically needed machine tools."

If the producers' petition for an increase is denied subsequently, in whole or in part, however, the contract price must be revised to conform with OPA's decision, and, if necessary, refunds made to the purchaser.

Inventory Ruling Revised

Restrictions on the size of inventories which may be built up by wholesalers and distributors in United States territories and possessions were removed by the War Production Board yesterday in an amendment to the suppliers' inventory order.

Unrestricted accumulation of supplies will be permitted, WPB said, because of the "current uncertainties of shipping and the fact that transportation facilities themselves act to limit the stocks of dealers reached only by sea routes.

No change was made with respect to domestic suppliers.

WPB Indorses Scrap Drive

Final details of a two million dollar national advertising campaign, designed to stimulate the flow of scrap metal into war production, were approved yesterday by the War Production Board.

The campaign will begin July 20, involving newspaper advertisements in every State, trade papers, magazines and radio stations.

The fund for the drive was contributed chiefly by the iron and steel industry and the campaign will be sponsored by the American Industries' Salvage Committee, organized from the industries affected at the request of WPB's conservation division. This committee will select the advertising and the publicity mediums used.

The Outlook

Every Vacant Room Rented to War Worker Means Big Saving of Critical Materials

Your spare bedroom may have a war job coming up. Many people in war production centers—people who never had a stranger in their homes—have fixed up rooms where the kids used to sleep to furnish housing for harassed war workers.

And the outlook is that more such rooms will be needed.

Specifically, the estimates of War Houser John B. Blandford, jr., call for the housing of at least 850,000 war workers in private homes between now and July 1, 1943.

HOUSING AND ROOMING: Best guess is that some 1,600,000 war workers will move into war centers during the year from July to July. This does not include those who will go to work at jobs in their home towns. In other words, all 1,600,000 will be looking for housing.

New war housing is expected to provide accommodations for 50,000 to 100,000 single persons; for 75,000 to 150,000 couples, and for 400,000 to 500,000 families. Private builders are expected to furnish from 240,000 to 300,000 of the family dwellings. The rest will be built by Government agencies.

THE REASON: The growing urgency of material shortages has forced revision of housing plans. In addition to the scarcity of such things as piping, heating equipment, refrigerators and other necessities, shortages now threaten in lumber and other basic building materials.

To stretch available material into the greatest amount of housing, war housing plans now emphasize the "duration dormitory," where workers will share such things as bathrooms, community dining halls and recreation rooms. Thus, the amount of plumbing, of kitchen ware and other metal products is cut down drastically compared with the amount needed to build individual family dwellings.

Housers say it is impossible to lay out in advance a rigid program of housing. Not only does the materials situation change from week to week, but the need for war housing in given localities also changes. Thus, for the great Willow Run bomber plant, say the housers, dwellings were planned on Ford's estimate that 100,000 men would be employed; now the estimate of employment has been cut almost in half. Such changes occur frequently as war production plans shift to get maximum output from minimum use of materials and men.

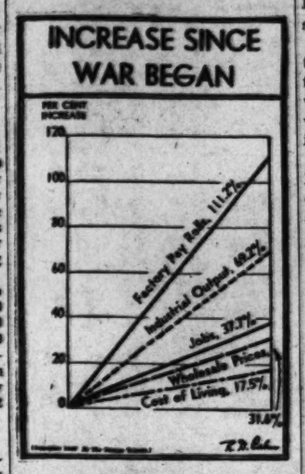
WARNING! Don't rush out and buy a lot of new furniture for the spare room without first checking the housing situation in your town. Housers caution that such rapid-fire patriotism might end in disappointment. Local housing authorities can advise you whether a need exists for more rooms for war workers. They can help you decide, too, what is a fair rental under the rent control laws.

ROOMS FOR RENT: War housers are planning a real drive in the near future to put all the spare rooms in war-congested areas into the job of housing the war workers.

Although Architectural Forum and other trade sources have charged that terrible overcrowding threatened to hamper the war effort in many production centers and military areas, the war housers assert that workers coming into most war areas are being housed promptly if not always with the comfort they might like.

Of 300 homes registration offices in war production towns, only 18 have reported demands for rooms which could not be met. Many workers coming into such towns, of course, find rooms on their own, without the assistance of these volunteer, locally financed room-finding agencies.

Officials believe that a real drive to get vacant rooms into the housing program would go a long way toward meeting the increasing need. Every vacant room added to the Nation's housing for war workers, of course, means a saving of critical materials which otherwise might be expended in building "duration dormitories" or other housing.



Week's Retail Sales Reported 3 to 8% Down

By the Associated Press

New York, July 17.—Spotty retail trade during the past week, with the usual summer slump in evidence, was reported today in the weekly mercantile survey of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

Retailers found hot weather spurred interest in vacation merchandise but adversely affected housewares buying.

Compared with the exceptionally heavy July volume of a year ago dollar sales were off 3 to 8 per cent for the Nation. The decline from a year ago by major regions was New England 2 to 7 per cent, East 6 to 12, Middle West 1 to 6, Southwest 2 to 6, Northwest 5 to 10, Pacific Coast 3 to 7 and South unchanged to down 3 per cent.

Response to special sales and clearances at reduced prices was reported good and some early promotions of fall merchandise were made.

Heavy payments against charge accounts were said to have reduced sharply the number of "frozen" accounts.

Wholesale business increased during the week with an influx of buyers in fall markets but most commitments were labeled conservative by analysts. Some retailers with heavy inventories deferred shipping dates on orders placed earlier.

Reserve Banks Buy 129 Million In U. S. Bonds

By the Associated Press

The Federal Reserve Board disclosed yesterday that the 12 regional Federal Reserve banks bought 129 million dollars worth of Government securities in the week ended July 15.

While the banks frequently buy and sell Government securities through their open market committee, purchases of this size usually are associated with efforts to minimize fluctuations in the Government securities market. However, another important factor in recent purchases has been to furnish investment funds for other purposes to certain large banks which have nearly exhausted their excess reserves.

Last week purchases included 76 million dollars of the Treasury certificates of indebtedness, 45 million dollars of Treasury bills, seven million dollars of Treasury notes and one million dollars of Treasury bonds.

An indication that part of these purchases were intended to provide investment funds to certain banks was given in an estimate of the board that excess reserves of all member banks of the Federal Reserve system dropped 250 million dollars during the week and approximated $2,070,000,000 on July 15. This total is the lowest in several years, and while large on a Nation-wide basis might indicate that some banks had almost used up their excess reserves through purchases of securities or extension of loans.

New York Cotton

New York, July 17 (AP).—Disposal of the 100 per cent of parity loan bill continued a dominating factor in cotton futures trading today and prices closed at this session's lowest levels—losses of $1.15 to $1.30 a bale. New Orleans interests and commission houses were the most active sellers as covering and trade buying absorbed the offerings. Some quarters felt that administration action could destroy further such inflationary tendencies might cause the full-parity loan bill to be killed altogether.

Ickes Cites Need for Gas Subsidizing

By the Associated Press

Lorain, Ohio, July 17.—Petroleum Coordinator Ickes told a press conference today "there is every probability that from this point on the increased cost" of gasoline in the Eastern States" will be paid by subsidy."

Ickes, who came to Lorain to see the new Texas-Illinois pipeline in the making, added: "It is a general war cost and there is no reason why Easterners should have to bear it all."

W. Alton Jones, president of War Emergency Pipeline, Inc., said oil companies had lost a total of 40 to 50 million dollars so far in bringing fuel east by tank car instead of by tanker and declared "this deficit financing of course cannot go on."

The present hauling rate east is 780,000 barrels a day, against but 131,000 a year ago, Jones added.

Hopes for Pipe Steel

Ickes came here to witness the making of "the largest steel pipe ever manufactured for the transportation of oil" and said he hopes steel may become available to extend the forthcoming Texas-Illinois line to New York.

Describing operations "which are going forward today in this great mill of the National Tube Co.," Secretary Ickes declared it "is making the largest steel pipe ever manufactured for the transporattion of oil—24 inches in diameter. One hundred miles of this pipe will be made this month and 100 miles next month.

"By early November the total will be 550 miles. A month later this 550 miles of pipe will be in the ground, carrying 300,000 barrels of crude oil daily out of Texas into Illinois—more oil than has ever been carried by any other pipeline ever built anywhere in the world. From Illinois most of this oil will be transshipped to the East by railway tank cars, river barges and tankers on the Great Lakes."

Ickes reviewed his earlier unsuccess efforts to obtain steel for a Texas-New Jersey pipeline and said:

Partial Solution Seen

"It was only because I realized the importance of oil, both for the war and for the prevention of severe civilian hardship, that I continued to plead for the steel which eventually was granted. Now we have it or part of it.

"Because it will only partly solve the problem, I still cherish the hope that the steel for the continuation of the pipeline to New York may become available, without interfering too much with any more urgent war need."

Ickes was accompanied by Ben F. Fairless, director of National Tube's parent, the United States Steel Corporation, and R. F. Harris, National Tube president. The 24 million dollar line will run from Longview, Tex., to near Salem, Ill.

Jones disclosed "we expect to start laying the pipe by the end of this month, probably at the south end," adding that "the work will be in progress on several sections simultaneously as soon as all the contracts are let." Describing it as "a race against time from the very beginning," he declared "we are going to have to average about 4½ miles a day in order to finish 550 miles by December."

A Canopy of Trees . .

Oaks, Elms, Birch, Magnolia—dozens of kinds of trees rear their noble heads in lovely Cedar Hill. Listen! with Glynn

(By Announcer Bob Menefee for Paul Glynn, now vacationing.)

RAMBLING ON RADIO AT WJSV: The very newest announcer at WJSV is Vern Hansen; hails from WGN, Chicago . . . Did you ever think that one of the reasons Arthur Godfrey's morning program is so successful is the fact that he selects his music with care—seeing that everyone gets the kind of music he likes? . . . Gunnar Back is on vacation. We all miss his Thursday morning "Prize Package" program . . . Why did I ever say I would write this column? Words come fairly easy on the air, but not on paper.

Recommended for Sunday listening: "Womanpower" at 12:15 p. m. . . . Everyone enjoyed the performance of WJSV Announcer Redge Allen, who appeared in the Cross Roads production of "Separate Rooms" . . . There's a rumor going around that Park Simmons was given a job with the Florida Chamber of Commerce while on vacation there recently . . . Lee Vickers does a swell job on the United States Navy Band program . . . Joe King makes his Fort Belvoir show a real contribution to soldier morale.

The listening public should give a lot more credit to radio engineers, whose fine training and experience make a program listenable and entertaining. WJSV is fortunate to have such an excellent engineering staff.

By the way, do you listen to the Sunshine News Reporter at 7:30 a. m. over WJSV? Yep, the guy who wrote this tells you what's news Monday through Saturday at that time.

Contract Bridge

East, of today's hand, had cause to regret his double of South's six-club contract as declarer proceeded to win his small slam rather neatly. Our contributor analyzes the play this way:

Today's Hand

Neither Side Vulnerable
NORTH DEALER

NORTH: ♠ A 10 9 8 4 3 ♡ A 3 ◇ K ♣ A 10 9 5
WEST: ♠ J 7 6 5 ♡ J 7 5 2 ◇ J 10 8 4 ♣ 8
EAST: ♠ Q 2 ♡ K 9 8 4 ◇ A Q 7 3 2 ♣ J 6
SOUTH: ♠ K ♡ Q 10 6 ◇ 9 6 5 ♣ K Q 7 4 3 2

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
4 ♣	Pass	5 ♣	Pass
6 ♣	Dble	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: 8 ♣.

"After East doubled, West opened with his singleton club, which declarer took with the queen in the closed hand. Declarer realized he did not, under ordinary circumstances, have the strength for a slam hand, since he was playing without four jacks, two queens, a king and an ace, which he knew would make the hand difficult.

"He saw that his only chance to make the contract was to set up his spades. After winning the first trick South led his king of spades and returned to the dummy with the ace of trumps. He led his spade ace, discarding a heart, trumped a spade, let himself in dummy again with a low club lead to the ten and trumped the fourth round of spades, catching West's jack. The ten of hearts was played to the ace, and the heart queen and a low diamond were discarded on the two good spades. A diamond lead went to East's ace, but the next two tricks were won by trumps separately in the dummy and declarer hands, North trumping a diamond and South the three of hearts. South made six odd, losing only the diamond ace. The contract happened to be the winning margin for the evening."

Navy Aces Bag 11 More Japs

Arthur James Brassfield, U. S. N., 32, of Browning, Mo., got four at Midway. Elbert Scott McCusky, U. S. N. R., 27, of 824 Burkle Road, Stuttgart, Ark., bagged three. William Nicholas Leonard, U. S. N., 26, of 3810 Alabama Avenue, St. Petersburg, Fla., and Richard Gunter Crommelin, U. S. N., 25, of Harrogate Springs, Wetumpka, Ala., shot down two apiece. Their other victories over Japanese pilots were scored during the Coral Sea engagement.

Lieutenant McCusky won the Distinguished Flying Cross in the raid upon the Marshall and Gilbert Islands earlier in the war. With the aid of his wing man, he shot down a four-engined bomber when it attempted to attack his carrier

'Heroes' Day Rally in Post Square

Several thousand persons, attending the American Heroes' Day war bond rally in Post Square yesterday as part of the Retailers for Victory campaign were told by a recipient of the D. S. C. and Croix de Guerre that if "we can beat that gang once we can do it twice."

The speaker, Theodore Cogswell, District registrar of wills, who won the two medals along with the Purple Heart decoration and two Silver Star Citations in the last war, said "our country is not yet awake to the dread seriousness of the situation which confronts us. We would be less than candid if we did not admit to ourselves that thus far we have not been fighting a winning war."

Recalling 1918 episodes of the last war, when the situation appeared gloomy for the Allies, Cogswell described the great American drive and its decisive results. But he said "we need time, men and money—we already have the will to win. But time is not yet on our side and the peril is growing." He urged those remaining at home to do their part by buying war bonds.

"We cannot get grab a rifle for ourselves but we can do the next best thing—we can buy one for our sons or our neighbors' sons," he asserted.

The rally was one of hundreds held throughout the country in observance of "American War Heroes' Day," sponsored by the Retailers Advisory Council of the Treasury. In Chicago, participants in a breakfast rally paid a total of five million dollars in war bonds for admission. Mothers of service men paraded in many cities and in others scrolls bearing names of local men and women in the services were unveiled. In St. Louis, merchants gave away bundles of free postcards for mailing to service men by war bond and stamp purchasers.

Scores of Washingtonians who bought bonds at the Hecht Co. here had the privilege of autographing a 900-pound torpedo which is destined for a United States submarine tube and eventual delivery to an Axis ship.

At the Post Square rally, the crowd, sweltering in the mid-day sun, got a long glimpse of Film Star Loretta Young. She said, "Let's be 100 and 10 per cent Americans today. Let's really back up the war heroes and all the other soldiers, sailors, aviators and marines by investing at least 10 per cent of our earnings in war savings . . . We're getting the ships, we're getting the men, let's get the money, too."

Jimmy Dorsey's band played and Miss Helen O'Connell, a singer for the band, got a nose bleed just before her number, but went on bravely. H. L. Rust, jr., chairman of the District War Savings Committee, was master of ceremonies.

A broadcast during the afternoon featured Miss Young; Mrs. R. D. McClure of University City, Mo., mother of Lieut. Charles M. McClure, one of the American fliers who bombed Tokyo; Capt. Florence McDonald and Lieut. Ruth M. Straub, Army nurses who served on Corregidor.

replacements from home for combat losses; it will continue to receive new recruits from civil life and from other Allied armies; it will be a casual depot, returning men out of hospital to units at the front.

Unlike the huge casual depots of the last war, this one will not ordinarily send men back to their old outfits. As soon as a man's place in the battle line is vacant it will be filled by a fresh replacement; when he is ready for duty again he will be sent where he is needed most.

This is the same principle you saw operating in training back home: the thing that determines how and where a man will serve is his country's need and nothing else. From the day he takes the oath he is a member of the Army of the United States, not of the Umpteenth Infantry.

Much Like Recruits at Home

So far the recruits who have passed through the replacement center in Northern Ireland have been much like those you saw at Fort Bragg and Camp Wheeler and Keesler Field and Fort Riley. There are schoolboys among them, and lawyers and salesmen and clerks and mechanics and accountants and factory hands. They are classified exactly as are those at home, by the same methods on the same cards, and are assigned to units in the field as their skills are needed.

At first this replacement center gave new recruits two weeks of preliminary basic training before sending them on, inculcating in them the rudiments of soldiering. Now they are sent out as soon as possible (many of them must be held several days for dental work), completely fitted out except for weapons. A training schedule is ready and equipment is available to give them military training as soon as this is desired.

No effort will be made to convert them into full fledged combat soldiers at the replacement center; that will be left to the officers and noncoms of their units once they are assigned. At this replacement center they will be taught something of soldierly bearing and deportment, they will be given enough facings and marchings to overcome their civilian awkwardness, they will be made familiar with the Garand rifle and taught how to handle it. Sufficient instruction will be available to teach them to roll their packs and pitch their shelter tents and not be altogether helpless in the field.

Men coming into your Army from the armies of other nations have much to unlearn before they can begin learning to soldier the American way. Weapons and manuals of arms are different, commands are different, facings and marchings are different. Some of these veteran soldiers, who have attained noncommissioned rank and are enlisted in grade, find their unfamiliarity with American arms and methods sometimes embarrassing when they are sent to a strange outfit as noncoms.

New Troubles for Old Sergeants

Meanwhile recruits are leaving this replacement center almost as raw as when they entered it. They receive complete uniforms, down to the last necktie and handkerchief; they are introduced to rib-clinging American Army chow; they are herded through the routines of being clothed, inoculated, classified and fed by a burly first sergeant who probably never will become resigned to shooing recruits along instead of marching them.

"They don't give me much trouble," he says, "except they're always losing their papers and things. When I want to get them from one place to another I just point to the building and say 'go over there.'"

In his flock he has had some characters who would seem much out of place in a replacement center back home.

There is a soldier of fortune, for instance, who fought through the Spanish civil war on the Loyalist side. He was a jockey back in the States and now he is a military policeman in Northern Ireland.

One recruit gave up a reserve commission in the United States Army to enlist in the Canadian forces soon after the war started. He is back in his own Army now, a private first class in the Signal Corps.

Another flew for France until that country was overrun by the Nazi panzers. Then he went with the Free French forces, flying when he could get something to fly, and now he is an M. P. with the A. E. F. He is a few months too old to qualify as a flying cadet in this Army.

Americans But Never at Home

There are lots of young fellows, 18 and 19, born of American parents in England or Ireland or of English or Irish parents in America, who have come into the Army of their own country. Some of these lads have never been in America; some of them were born there but came over here before they were old enough to remember anything of their native country. They have various reasons for enlisting.

"I got tired of waiting while a war was on," said a tall, blue-eyed Irish boy, "and my father and mother didn't want me to go in any army but this one. They were naturalized in America and I was born there."

"When this war is over I want to live in the States," said the son of a London cabinetmaker. "I want to go out there with a record in their Army."

There was one fellow, 43 years old and married, with the ribbons of the British service in the World War on his new American blouse, who had come over here as a radio mechanic for the R. A. F. before Pearl Harbor. He was a machine gunner in the Canadian army last time and a New England textile mill foreman for a while between wars.

"I done what I could last time," he said, "and I want to do what I can in this one before I'm too old for them to take me."

Young or old, married or single, almost all of these recruits see good sense in opportunities to buy cheap Government insurance and to save part of their soldier pay for a new start after the war. At least 75 per cent of them take out the maximum $10,000 of insurance; almost as many make allotments or take part in one of the Army's plans to lay money aside in saving funds or war bonds.

Many Offer, But Can't Serve

With their British and Irish accents, the recruits who pass through the American Army replacement center 3000 miles from home are helping to launch it on a career of valuable service in this war.

It is the first of many which will be established on this side of the water, destined to occupy a place in the Army's organization as vital as those replacement centers at home. Its present crop of trainees is somewhat different from the replacements who will pass through it later, men from home and from the battlefronts.

Those who come through now, as you have seen, are not too articulate about their reasons for wanting a place in the great Army America is training for battle. They are vague in their reasons but sure enough in their purpose.

There is no oratory, no flag waving, no mawkish sentiment about them. They just come in and join.
